

Guidelines for Submission of Documents

Submission of Documents

Readers are invited to submit documents that would be of interest to the international legal community. International Legal Materials reproduces the official text of a document whenever possible; if the official version is not available in English, an unofficial translation is acceptable. The original text must accompany unofficial English translations. The source of the document, e.g., a government ministry, a court, an embassy, or an official gazette, should be clearly identified.

Introductory Notes

Introductory Notes are brief articles — no more than a few paragraphs — intended to provide background information for the document they accompany. They should be objective, without judgmental commentary. For example, Introductory Notes for treaties might include a short history of the negotiations, the dates of signature and entry into force; for legislation, its history and international significance; for judicial proceedings, the background of the case and a citation to the full text in the original language.

Introductory Notes are solicited after the underlying document has been selected for publication in International Legal Materials.

Format

Introductory Notes should be one to two pages in length. Both Introductory Notes and unofficial translations should be single-spaced with double-spacing between paragraphs. Authors and translators should send copies of their submission on a PC-compatible diskette. ILM uses WordPerfect.

A statement giving the author's name, title, address, telephone and fax numbers must accompany all submissions. Where available, an e.mail address is appreciated.

Acceptance of Materials and Corrections

Submissions cannot be returned. Translators and others submitting material will be notified of the acceptance of their document for publication. Once a submission has been accepted for reproduction, The American Society of International Law will send a publication agreement. Translators and Introductory Note Authors will be acknowledged in ILM.

In some cases minor editorial or typographical alterations may be made without contacting the author or translator. Major corrections will be sent to the author or translator for approval. Corrected Introductory Notes or translations must be returned within the time specified.

INTERNATIONAL LEGAL MATERIALS®

Statement of Editorial Policy

International Legal Materials, a core publication of The American Society of International Law, reproduces significant documents representing the diverse nature of international law. These documents range from traditional international law topics such as trade, jurisdiction, and maritime law, to contemporary developments such as environmental law, women's rights, war crimes, and transborder electronic commerce.

International Legal Materials serves a global readership of legal scholars, government officials, and private practitioners who share a common interest in the law. Consequently documents are selected from worldwide sources on the basis of their present and future legal significance. Purely political or issue-advocacy documents are excluded, as are draft laws, unless they are a part of an ongoing process of legal codification, or will soon appear in a final form which is substantially the same as the draft.

International Legal Materials serves a dual function — to inform readers about important trends in the law, and to provide a lasting archive of documents in a widely recognized and citable form. Some documents include a content summary permitting quick access to articles or sections within the text. In addition, select documents include an Introductory Note written by an expert in that area of the law. In order to ensure publication at the forefront of international legal discourse, all documents are reproduced from the best available source, whether obtained electronically or in traditional printed form. Translations are usually unofficial and should not be considered authoritative, unless otherwise indicated.

International Legal Materials is compiled with the assistance of its Corresponding Editors around the world and is collected and prepared for publication in Washington, D.C. by a staff of Attorney-Editors acting with the advice of the Editorial Advisory Committee.

Volume XXXVIII reflects advances in our method of production designed to help ensure timely publication and presents a new format designed to improve readability. A great deal of thought and care has been expended in providing the quality of publication you have grown to expect, while making use of technological advances that were simply not available when ILM debuted in 1962. We look forward to continuing to do our best for you.
