

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF HELDER CÂMARA

Patrick J. Leonard, C.S.Sp.

This selected bibliography attempts to supply future students of the life and work of Helder Câmara* with an indication of the main sources of information about the man and his ideas. While the amount of published material is large, it is not yet overwhelming. As Schilling remarks: "Bibliographical material about Helder Camara is plentiful, but it is very scattered, since it is mainly found in newspapers and magazines of the whole world. As a true social militant, Helder Camara never loses a chance to speak or to write, to pass on his message. Consequently hardly a day passes without the newspapers of Brazil, Latin America or the world giving some news of him, a declaration, an interview, an account of one of his conferences. Our bishop is News" (Helder Camara [Montevideo, Uruguay: Ediciones La Marcha, 1970]).

In the course of writing a dissertation on Helder Câmara, a bibliography of one hundred pages was compiled. The limitations of space mitigated against its unabridged publication here. Consequently, I have chosen to emphasize works about Helder Câmara as being of greatest value to future students. Citations of works by Helder Câmara are more readily accessible.

Thus, portions of the original bibliography not appearing in these pages include: Articles with source material on Helder Câmara's background; books written by him; books with background source material; communications from Helder Câmara; his discourses, sermons, important letters, prefaces; and documents in which he shared. I have authorized the Pius XII Library at St. Louis University to supply a copy of my full listing upon request.

Even the complete bibliography does not pretend to be exhaustive. Yet it should prove adequate for most student needs. It is meant primarily for students who read English; sources in other languages have been included mainly for those who wish to deal with the original language rather than translations, or where an English version was not available.

*The apparent inconsistency in accenting "Helder Câmara" reflects varying usage in the different languages cited.—Ed.

The fact that most of this material is available on microfilm in the Pius XII Library should also be of assistance.

This abbreviated version deals neither with the published and "public" nor with the "private" writings of Helder Câmara. Indeed, the full bibliography does not include his private correspondence. He has always been a voluminous letter writer and some private collections of his letters are known to exist. However, he has requested that they not be made available for research until after his death. Similarly, several collections of his "poems" or poetic meditations are in private circulation, but so far he has permitted only a few to appear in print; 105 of these poems from a private collection are in the Pius XII Library microfilm collection. Neither does the original bibliography deal with archival material such as exists in the files of the Conference of Bishops of Brazil, Brazilian Catholic Action, the Latin American Episcopal Conference, and the Roman Curia.

In his earlier seminary and priesthood days Helder Câmara was a prolific writer of book reviews, especially on educational topics. It has not been possible to make a listing of these reviews since copies of most of the publications (e.g., O Bandeirante) are hard to come by. Those available do throw much light on the younger Helder and it is hoped that further research in Brazilian libraries will enable a fairly complete listing to be made. During those early days he used various pen names: The first was "Athanasio"; reviews written in conjunction with his friends Jeova Motta and Severino Sombra were signed "Agathon"; and the pen name he used most was "Alceu da Silveira." Most of these reviews, some articles by and about Helder, and many news items concerning him and his friends appeared in the newspapers and magazines listed here under the heading "Periodicals with which Helder Câmara was Connected" (P). A selection from Revista Brasileira de Pedagogia is in the Pius XII Library microfilm collection. Periodicals he edited contain much unsigned material obviously written by him.

"Interviews with Helder Câmara" (I) are an important source of information about his life and thought. Some were taped "on the run" at airports or between conferences. Others contain his deeply thought-out replies to questionnaires sent him by students or journalists.

"Articles about Helder Câmara" (A) can be roughly divided into three main categories. First are the in-depth studies of his personality, thought, and significance. Most of these articles are found in "learned periodicals." Next come more popular, descriptive, or journalistic essays. These usually appear in glossy or religious magazines and are lavishly illustrated with photographs. Some may occur in the editorial or pictorial sections of Sunday or weekly newspapers. The fact that they are "popular" does not mean that they are necessarily superficial; in fact they often contain revealing insights about Dom Helder. Several series of articles in Brazilian magazines and newspapers are dedicated solely to bitter attacks on Dom Helder's actions, ideology, and character. The third category under this heading is made up of newspaper reports about events in the life of Dom Helder, of his friends, or his Archdiocese; brief quotations from his discourses or interviews; brief impressions of others about him or his doing. Of these the number is almost infinite. No attempt has been made to present an exhaustive list in this third category. The student who wishes to study the press reporting of a particular event in Dom Helder's life should go directly to the newspapers likely to carry such news items and comments.

While numerous books and articles contain passing reference to him, those listed under the heading "Books with Significant Reference to Helder Câmara" (BR) and "Articles and Speeches with Significant Reference to Helder Câmara" (AR) are listed for the precise reason that they are significant. The authors are not primarily interested in Helder Câmara. For that very reason their passing comments often help set him in a truer focus within a background of events or people. Books and articles dedicated to a single person tend to give a "larger than life" portrait in which the background may slip out of focus.

As for "Books about Helder Câmara" (BA), one should perhaps begin by saying that no full-scale scholarly biography has been written. José de Broucker's book (1969) is based on a long series of interviews and conversations extending over several weeks in 1968. It combines biographical details, character sketches, public statements, and private thoughts in a highly readable, journalistic manner. Weigner and Moosbrugger deal almost exclusively with Dom Helder's thought on church and world affairs. Burgeon's book is a deplorable mixture of fictionalized biography or biographical romance. Cayuela probably gives the best and most complete presentation of the different facets of Dom Helder's thought on present-day problems; his book deals primarily with the 1964–68 period, with occasional flashbacks to earlier events. All the books originally written in Spain seem to borrow heavily from de Broucker, from one another, and from the published discourses with a disconcerting lack of source references or acknowledgements. Schilling's work is a brief but penetrating analysis of Dom Helder's thought from the viewpoint of a fellow Brazilian, living in exile. A good biography of Helder Câmara is a definite need.
