Domestic Architecture and the Use of Space

An Interdisciplinary
Cross-Cultural Study
Susan Kent, Editor

Domestic Architecture and the Use of Space investigates the relationship between the built environment and the organization of space. The contributors are classical and prehistoric archaeologists, anthropologists and architects who from their different backgrounds are able to provide some important and original insights into this relationship.

The Romanization of Britain

An Essay in Archaeological Interpretation
Martin Millett

The Romanization of Britain is a study of cultural change and interaction. While there are many narrative histories of Roman Britain, this synthesis of recent archaeological work presents the evidence in a new and provocative way.

Archaeology Yesterday and Today

Zdenek Vasicek and Jaroslav Malina
Marek Zvelebil, Translator

Archaeology Yesterday and Today is a radical new interpretation of the philosophical, social and political forces that have shaped archaeology from antiquity to the present. Translated from the Czech, this book traces the development of archaeology from a uniquely European, as distinct from the more current Anglo-American, perspective.

Edward Palmer's Arkansaw Mounds

Edited by Marvin D. Jeter

During the 1880s a massive effort was launched by the Smithsonian Institution to discover who had built the prehistoric burial mounds found throughout the eastern United States. Arkansas was unusually rich in prehistoric remains, especially mounds, and became a major focus of the study. Arkansaw Mounds tells the story of this exploration and of Edward Palmer, one of the nineteenth century's greatest natural historians and archeologists, recruited to lead the research project.

Marvin Jeter and his contributors tell of Palmer's work through the notes, letters, and reports he wrote during the explorations. Extensive background material, annotation, biographies of those involved in the efforts, and over a hundred illustrations are included in this intriguing account.
