Health, Law and Human Rights: Exploring the Connections

An International Cross-Disciplinary Conference Honoring Jonathan M. Mann

September 29–October 1, 2001: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Sheraton Society Hill Hotel

The Health and Human Rights Movement has become a dynamic force in international public health. This three-day, action-oriented conference will use plenary sessions, case studies, and small, interactive workshops to examine key empirical questions about the movement and its conceptual foundations. Specifically, leaders in public health advocacy, research, and administration will examine how law and human rights are related to the public's health; how human rights and legal strategies can effectively promote public health; how advocates, researchers, and policymakers can use human rights as a framework for addressing structural causes of health and illness; and where the health and human rights movement is going in the future.
