the Newman Philosophy of Science Series*

SCIENCE AND METAPHYSICS

By John Russell S.J. 2/6 net

Science and metaphysics are both concerned with the nature of being, but concerned with it from widely different points of view. To realise the difference and the value of each approach is the purpose of this book.

LIFE AND ITS ORIGIN

By Philip Fothergill 3/6 net

This book not only discusses life - what it is and how it came to be - but also those borderline cases between the living and the non-living, the virus organisms, which have formed one of the most fascinating subjects of recent biological research.

WHITEHEAD'S PHILOSOPHY OF PHYSICS

By Lawrence Bright O.P. 2/6 net

In the Series on the Philosophy of Science, the work of Alfred North Whitehead cannot be ignored. He was not only a philosopher but a brilliant mathematician, and his philosophy of physics, though the most neglected part of his philosophy, is also probably the most important. It is discussed here.

Worlds Apart

A Tour of European Monasteries

TUDOR EDWARDS

This account of a layman's travels among the living monasteries of Europe shows how a way of life, which has not changed fundamentally from medieval times, still flourishes in the atomic age. Before starting his tour through Europe, the author gives a clear résumé of monastic history. Not only monastic ideals, but particular houses and their occupants, including some monks of singular character, are depicted in a lively manner. Even more intriguing, perhaps, are certain visitors—saints and otherwise—from the outside world, who are to be found retiring for short spells in monasteries. The industries and crafts of many monasteries are also described.

Prophet and Witness in Jerusalem

ADRIAN HASTINGS

There has been no recent study of the background to St. Luke's writings. Mr. Hastings traces the factors which built up St. Luke's own theology, the sources of his gospel account and the reasons for the various emphases in his writings. Scholarly, enlightening and easy to read.
