In Memoriam

Hannah Arendt

Hannah Arendt died December 4, 1975 of a heart attack, while in her apartment entertaining friends. Her death came as a great shock, for since her recovery from an earlier heart attack two years ago, she seemed as vigorous and intellectually alive as ever. At an age when most other thinkers have already finished their important work, she was engaged in a major new project, a philosophical reflection on man's mental faculties, which she had chosen to call The Life of the Mind.

Hannah Arendt was one of the outstanding political thinkers of our time, recognized both inside and outside the academic community, and she had a long list of accomplishments and awards to her name. Among her most recent honors were the Benjamin Lippincott Award from the APSA and the Sonning Award of Denmark. Two years before, she had been invited to give the prestigious Gifford Lectures, which had given her the impetus to begin her latest book. She explained something of what this success meant to her in her acceptance speech for the Lessing Prize which she received in 1959. "An honor gives us a forcible lesson in modesty; for it implies that it is not for us to judge our own merits as we judge the merits and accomplishments of others. In awards, the

Retirements

William O. Farber, University of South Dakota, retires after 40 years as chairman and professor of political science.

John S. Gillespie, associate professor of political science, Tulane University, retired July 1, 1976 as Emeritus Associate Professor.
