

---

About the Authors

---

Michael Alexeev is an Associate Professor of Economics at Indiana University, Bloomington. He specializes in transitional economies.

Sara Cobb is Associate Dean in the Human and Organizational Development Program at the Fielding Institute in Santa Barbara, California. In her position, she supervises doctoral research and contributes to the administration of this "virtual" graduate program. Her research is currently focused on the relationship between discourse and violence in the context of human rights issues.

Kenneth Dau-Schmidt is Professor of Law and John S. Hastings Faculty Fellow at Indiana University, Bloomington. His research focuses on alternative economic models for analyzing law, including a preference-shaping theory of the criminal law and a bargaining model of labor law. Most recently he has done work on the possibility of an interdisciplinary discourse on law between economics and sociology.

Lisa Frohmann is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Her research and teaching interests focus on organizational processing, the social construction of legalities, violence, and ethnographic methods. Her publications address questions related to case processing, decision-making practices, and sexual assault.

Janet A. Gilboy is a Senior Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. She is the author of several articles focusing on central issues relating to government agencies including the nature of discretionary decisionmaking; the functioning of mechanisms of control of agency action; the effects of legislator intervention on agency activity; and the implications of governmental use of private enterprise to perform social control functions for the state.

Barry Goetz is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Dayton, where he also teaches in the Criminal Justice Studies Program. He has also taught and held postdoctoral fellowships at the University of California at Los Angeles and Brown University. His research interests are in state theory and the sociology of organizations, especially where local government agencies are concerned. Currently he is working on a project that looks at the role of community police officers in helping to implement drug demand reduction and harm reduction policies in urban neighborhoods.

Lisa Hajjar is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Swarthmore College. She is writing a book entitled Authority, Resistance and the Law: A Study of the Israeli Military Court System in the Occupied Territories. She is also a member of the Editorial Committee of Middle East Report.

Robert H. Heidt is a Professor of Law at Indiana University, Bloomington. His research focuses on tort and antitrust law.

John P. Heinz is Owen L. Coon Professor of Law, Northwestern University, and Distinguished Research Fellow, American Bar Foundation. He is also former Executive Director of the American Bar Foundation. In addition to his studies of the legal profession, he also has done research on Washington influence peddlers.

Edward O. Laumann is the George Herbert Mead Distinguished Service Professor in the Department of Sociology and the College at the University of Chicago, Chairman of the Department of Sociology, Director of the Ogburn Stouffer Center for Population and Social Organization, and Editor, American Journal of Sociology. His research interests include social stratification, the sociology of the professions, occupations and formal organizations, social network analysis, the analysis of elite groups and national policymaking, and the sociology of human sexuality. He is author or co-author of a number of volumes in these fields.

Candace McCoy is currently Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice at the Graduate School of Criminal Justice, Rutgers University, Newark, where she teaches seminars in prosecution and the courts, sentencing, and law and society. Her research explores criminal justice policies and their impacts. Current projects include a theoretical analysis of jury decisionmaking, developments in community-oriented prosecution, and the impact of constitutional tort litigation on police reform. McCoy also serves as editor-in-chief of Justice System Journal.

Robert L. Nelson is Professor of Sociology, Chair of the Department of Sociology, and Director of the Law and Social Science Program at Northwestern University. He is also a Senior Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. His main interests are the relationship between law and social inequality and the social organization of law practice. His most recent book is Legalizing Gender Inequality: Courts, Markets, and Unequal Pay for Women (with William Bridges, forthcoming). In addition to his role as a co-principal investigator in the Chicago Lawyers II Project, which is analyzing interviews with some 900 lawyers in Chicago, he is studying the work and professional ideologies of lawyers and senior executives in Fortune 1,000 corporations.

Eric Rasmusen is an Associate Professor of Business Economics and Public Policy at Indiana University, Bloomington. He is best known as the author of Games and Information: An Introduction to Game Theory and does research in law and economics.

Paul S. Schnorr is Director of the Urban Studies Program, Associated Colleges of the Midwest.

Jeffrey Evans Stake is a Professor of Law at Indiana University, Bloomington, and member of the University Graduate School faculty. He teaches land-use controls, wills and trusts, and property. His research, which sometimes incorporates evolutionary and economic perspectives, focuses primarily on property and family law.

