

Review of International Studies

Editor

Professor Roy E Jones
University College, PO Box 78, Cardiff CF1 1XL, UK

Review of International Studies was established in 1975 as the British Journal of International Studies serving the needs of scholars concerned with politics, law, history, technology and those areas of social science which cultivate an interest in the academic study of the international arena. Each issue contains a number of substantial contributions, together with review articles designed to survey the literature in a particular field, analysing its contribution to a general understanding of international society and its definition at various levels of analysis – economic, historical, legal or political. The Review encourages the publication of papers which cross the traditional boundaries of academic enquiry, utilizing skills of one discipline to illuminate the scope, method and argument of another.

British International Studies Association (BISA).

British universities have, traditionally, been amongst the most active in the development of international studies, and, as a consequence, the community of British scholars in this field has expanded markedly. A group of those in teaching and research concluded in 1974, that the time had come to create a British International Studies Association. In January 1975 the BISA came formally into being. The objectives of the Association are to hold an Annual Conference on a defined theme, at a suitable academic venue; to co-ordinate, encourage and publicise the development of working groups from various universities and research institutes, and from different disciplines; and, to publish the Association's Review of International Studies.

Membership is open to scholars of any nationality, and is available in two classes: (a) Members – open to those engaged in teaching or research at an institution of higher learning or in an appropriate department of state, and (b) Associate Members – open to graduate students in any branch of international studies at a university. Applications for membership should be sent to the Secretary of the Association, c/o the Editor.
