

among Mac's most attractive characteristics.

Francis E. Rourke
Johns Hopkins University

Marian Elizabeth Ridgeway

Dr. Marian Elizabeth Ridgeway, professor emerita of political science at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, died on February 14, 1982, in Columbia, Missouri. Miss Ridgeway was 68 years old. She moved to Columbia after retirement from SIU-C in 1974. She received a bachelor's degree in journalism in 1935 and a master's degree in political science in 1946, both from the University of Missouri. The University of Illinois awarded her the Ph.D. in 1952. Before coming to SIU she had served as an instructor at the University at Missouri, at the State College of Washington at Pullman, and at the University of Kansas. In addition to teaching, Miss Ridgeway also had worked for the federal government for a number of years in the Resettlement Administration, the Farm Security Administration, the Federal Civil Service Commission, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Agricultural Economics. She was the author of two books, The Missouri Basin's Pick-Sloan Plan, published by the University of Illinois Press, and Interstate Compacts: A Question of Federalism, published by the Southern Illinois University Press. In addition to numerous articles she also prepared several reports for the Commission on State Government in Illinois and served as a consultant. Along with her teaching and research she was a leader in such organizations as the League of Women Voters, the American Association of University Professors, and the American Association of University Women as well as in many other groups.

Miss Ridgeway was demanding of her students and set high standards for them. During her career she served the university community and her department with integrity and with an extraordinary sense of loyalty. Her most significant contribution certainly was the fact that she served as a role model for the female political science professors who followed in her footsteps. According to the Directory of the American Political Science Association, in 1969 when she was promoted to full professor, she was only the 47th woman to achieve that rank in the United States. In recognition of her accomplishments the University of Missouri cited Miss Ridgeway as a distinguished alumna.

Manfred Landecker
Southern Illinois University
at Carbondale

Hugh Thompson Henry

Hugh T. Henry, former director of the Master of Public Administration program and professor emeritus at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, died on Saturday, January 23, 1982. He had been a member of the faculty since 1973, and had also conducted a number of courses at the University of Arkansas in Little Rock, an activity that continued even after his retirement in 1981.

During his tenure as director, the MPA program made an important contribution to public service education and graduated approximately 100 students who went into public service at the federal, state, and local levels. Mr. Henry's most recent contributions include his cooperation with faculty at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock on the creation of a public administration program at that institution and his collaboration over the last year with his colleagues at UAF on the further improvement and expansion of the MPA program.

Mr. Henry's long career was marked by a continuing commitment to public service, sometimes under exceptionally difficult circumstances. During World War II, he was director of Red Cross Recreational Services in the North and South Pacific, and from 1967-1970, he was a public administration advisor with the Agency for International Development in South Vietnam, concerned principally with urban and refugee services. His long professional career in city management included service as the executive engineer in Houston, Texas, as assistant city man-