

instructive both as a demonstration of a unique "crash" program of economic development in Africa and as a commentary on Arab-African relations.

Discussion led by Mr. Wilmington and the session chairman, Conrad Reining of the Library of Congress, who had studied the Zande, showed that there had been a lack of community development and that the population had been dispersed. The influence of the paysannat system of the Belgian Congo was also mentioned; rotation of crops had not been introduced in the Zande scheme itself but the Sudanese Zande had been influenced by their fellow tribesmen across the border.

The Ford Foundation has announced a series of grants totalling $15.1 million to Columbia, Harvard, and the University of California to help establish their non-western and related international studies as part of their permanent academic programs. The Columbia and California programs include African studies. The grants will support activities for a ten year period and their size and long range nature are designed to allow each university scope leeway in developing its own plans and programs.

The Ford Foundation also announced a grant of $80,000 to the Institute of Applied Economics, Paris, to support a program of research and training activities relating to African development, $1 million to Michigan State University to expand studies of areas where it has technical assistance programs; $200,000 to Spelman College, Atlanta, in cooperation with four other institutions (Clark, Morehouse and Morris Brown Colleges and Atlanta University); and $225,000 to Massachusetts Institute of Technology to help promote industrial development in Africa through internships for graduates of its School of Industrial Development.

A three-year program designed to strengthen teacher education in Africa has been inaugurated at Columbia University with a grant of $450,000 from Carnegie Corporation. The program aims also at more efficient cooperative use of resources in this area in Africa and the United Kingdom, and the United States, and hopes to strengthen mutual appreciation among participants, of African and American educational problems. The goal will be to assist in the steady emergence in Africa of educational patterns suited to African realities, which can draw on everything proved of value elsewhere which might be adaptable to African needs.

Professor Karl Bigelow of Columbia will direct the program and will be assisted in establishing general policy by representatives of six participating institutions in Africa as well as the University of London. A pattern of staff interchange will be established, a scholarship program for Africans to pursue advanced studies in education devised, and research facilitated. A special coordinated program designed to prepare Americans for educational work in Africa will be developed jointly by the University of London and Teachers College, where a new unit on African education will be established.

CONFERENCES AND MEETINGS

The eighth national conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO, to be held in Boston, October 23-26, 1961, will be devoted to Africa south of the Sahara. Vernon McKay of Johns Hopkins University, A.S.A. representative on the National Commission, has been appointed chairman of the organizing committee.

The U.S. National Commission regularly holds conferences every two years on subjects of importance to the United States and UNESCO. The conferences attract some 1,200 leaders in the fields of education, science,

The Fourth National Conference on Exchange of Persons will be held in San Francisco November 30 - December 3, under the sponsorship of the Institute for International Education. The theme of the conference will be "Educational Exchange for the Mutual Development of Nations"; a panel discussion on Africa, and workshops and clinics on current problems of international education, will be included. Speakers from Africa who will be present include Julius Kiano, member of the Legislative Council of Kenya; Kenneth Diké, principal of the University College, Ibadan, Nigeria; Davidson Nicol, rector of Fourah Bay College, Sierra Leone, and Nasr el Had Ali, Vice Chancellor of the University of Khartoum, Sudan.

A meeting to discuss "The Quest for Higher Education in East and Central Africa: Some Public and Private Responses in the United States" was convened by the Phelps-Stokes Fund in July. Approximately 50 African, American and British scholars and educators met to review programs affecting the education of Africans in areas of rapid political and technological change. The conference urged educational aid by the United States on a much larger scale, while American institutions of higher and technical education should also undertake to play a larger role in providing scholarship assistance for African students. The vital necessity of an adequate selection machinery was pointed out, and the group released a statement for Africans in the United States. A detailed report of the conference is to be issued.
