Christian Ethics and Contemporary Philosophy

edited by Ian T. Ramsey

Not only are the most diverse people now critical of underpinning morality by theology—many are puzzled about the whole character of Christian ethics. The essayists in this volume include unbelievers, agnostics, and Christians who are assorted and mostly lay. Most of their 24 essays are gathered from recent numbers of philosophical journals, but eight were written specially for this book. They are united by a concern about this new situation, and by a wish to reason reliably about it.

LEARNING TO THINK

7s 6d

Designed for use in the classrooms of senior forms in secondary schools, this book shows how thinking works. It demonstrates the principles of valid reasoning and aims, above all, to sharpen wits and critical faculties. A separate volume, COMPANION TO LEARNING TO THINK (6s.) provides full comments and where applicable, worked out solutions to the exercises.

LEARNING TO PHILOSOPHISE

13s 6d net

The author is concerned with the activity of philosophising rather than with the subject of philosophy. The book will be of great interest and value to sixth form students and first year undergraduates.

THE USE OF REASON

7s 6d net

A direct study of the processes of thinking. The book explains the workings of formal logic, and stresses the importance of flexibility in thinking.
