Museveni's Uganda: Paradoxes of Power in a Hybrid Regime

Aili Mari Tripp
Lynne Rienner

From the publisher: In Museveni's Uganda, Tripp takes a close, clear-sighted look at Ugandan politics since 1986, when Yoweri Museveni became the country's president.

Museveni's exercise of power has been replete with contradictions: steps toward political liberalization have been controlled in ways that further centralize authority, and despite claims of relative peace and stability, Uganda has been plagued by two decades of brutal civil conflict. Exploring these paradoxes, Tripp focuses on the complex connections among Museveni's economic and political reforms, his wars in the north and in Congo, the key roles of international donors and the military, and the institutional changes that have defined his presidency. She also highlights efforts by the judiciary, legislature, media, and civil society to check executive power. Tripp reflects analytically on the distinctiveness of the semiauthoritarian regime system and its implications for civil society, institutional growth, and real economic development.

Aili Mari Tripp is a professor of political science and gender and women's studies at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.
