

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

THEODORE G. CHIRICOS is Professor of Criminology in the School of Criminology, Florida State University. He has co-authored several recent articles on the problem of causal order in deterrence research and is working on a monograph entitled Unemployment, Crime and Social Control.

ROBERT M. EMERSON is Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles. He has conducted field research on social control processes in a variety of institutional settings, including juvenile courts, psychiatric emergency teams, and public school counselors.

VIRGINIA ALDIGÉ HIDAY is Associate Professor of Sociology at North Carolina State University. Her current research focuses on the sociology of mental health law.

HERBERT JACOB is Professor of Political Science and Urban Affairs at Northwestern University. He has recently co-edited and contributed to Crime in City Politics (1983) and is author of The Frustration of Policy: Governmental Responses to Crime (1984, forthcoming). He has just completed a term as president of the Law and Society Association.

ILENE H. NAGEL is Professor of Law at the Indiana University (Bloomington) School of Law. She is the author of several articles on pretrial release, plea, and sentencing decisions for criminal defendants, and on the sentencing decisions for white-collar offenders in particular. Presently, she is conducting research on class action litigation with Professors Sheldon J. Plager and Bryant G. Garth.

RAYMOND PATERNOSTER is Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice at the College of Criminal Justice, University of South Carolina. He is currently engaged in a three wave study of behavior and social control factors and a study of prosecutorial discretion in capital punishment.

LINDA E. SALTZMAN is Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology (Corrections), Anthropology and Social Work at Mankato State University. She has published articles in the area of deterrence, and her current interests include victimology, domestic violence, and sexual assault.

GORDON P. WALDO is Professor in the School of Criminology, Florida State University. His research interests include social control issues and capital punishment.