NEW FROM MOHR: Literary, Rhetorical and Communicative Analyses of Holy Scripture

Hans Dieter Betz
Paulinische Studien
Gesammelte Aufsätze III

This volume continues the publication of the author's collected essays in English and German by focusing on the letters and theology of the Apostle Paul. In the foreground are the literary and rhetorical analyses of difficult texts as well as problems of history of religions and theology. These issues have arisen from Paul's activities as a founder of churches, activities that included the apostolic responsibility of providing these churches with a social and religious identity in correspondence with the Christian message. To follow this process by way of detailed studies is the goal of the collection.

Schriftauslegung
im antiken Judentum und im Urchristentum. Herausgegeben von
Martin Hengel und Hermut Löhr

This volume illuminates the problem of making and interpretation of Holy Scripture in ancient Judaism and in the New Testament from various facets. The contribution from Martin Hengel works out a historical overall view of the emergence and meaning of holy writings for Judaism at the time of the second temple. Other contributions deal with the reception of the Holy Scripture by Flavius Josephus in the Paralipomena Jeremiae as well as by Paul, John and in Hebrews. This volume concludes its researches by examining the use of writings by the Amoraes and into the phenomena of sacred writings from the view point of the academic study of religion.

'Martyriumssucht'

Studien zur Darstellung und Deutung frühchristlicher Martyrien

Did voluntary martyrs provoke the persecutions of the early church? The author analyses those passages of patristic literature that seem to explain the beginnings of the persecutions. The rhetorical context of these passages demonstrates the usefulness of the topic 'voluntary martyrdom' in apologetic, polemical, pastoral and historical texts.
