
About the Authors

David J. Bordua is Professor Emeritus of Sociology at the University of Illinois, Urbana–Champaign. He has written on juvenile delinquency causation and theory, police organization and change, firearms ownership and crime, and felonious line-of-duty deaths of police. He is currently beginning a book on community-oriented policing.

Pamela Brandwein is Assistant Professor of Sociology and Political Economy in the School of Social Sciences at the University of Texas at Dallas. Her research in the sociology of constitutional law focuses on issues surrounding judicial structures of thought and the accomplishment of judicial work. She is now working on a book, Reconstructing Reconstruction: The Supreme Court and the Production of Historical Truth, which is about the contest to structure history and how “credible” history becomes crucial in the way the Supreme Court views civil rights. She is beginning a project that explores the production and use of competing versions of legal pragmatism.

Chester L. Britt is Assistant Professor of Justice and Sociology in the Crime, Law and Justice Program at Pennsylvania State University. His current research interests include the demography of crime, methodological issues in evaluation research, and the effects of communities on physical and mental well-being.

Debra S. Emmelman is an Assistant Professor at Southern Connecticut State University. She has published articles focusing on the organizational conditions that appear to facilitate an ethical defense posture and on how social class affects the adjudication of criminal cases through defense attorneys’ interpretive procedures. Her current project concentrates on the process by which defense attorneys determine “the strength of the evidence” in criminal cases.

John Fliter is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Kansas State University. His research interests include the jurisprudence of Justice David Souter and the impact of “three strikes” laws on state criminal justice systems. He is currently writing a book on the U.S. Supreme Court and prisoners’ rights.

Rebecca R. French is an Associate Professor of Law and Adjunct Professor of Anthropology at the University of Colorado at Boulder. She has written extensively on the legal system of Tibet under the Dalai Lamas and on Buddhist legal systems in general. Her book The Golden Yoke: The Legal Cosmology of Buddhist Tibet was published in 1995. Currently on leave at the East-West Center in Honolulu, she is finishing a book on the law codes of the Dalai Lamas and writing in the area of religion, law, and modernity.

Diane Harriford teaches in the Department of Sociology at Vassar College. Her interests include the sociological significance and the symbolic meanings of race, class, and gender. She is currently working on a manuscript about the symbolic meaning of "class" for the black middle class in the contemporary United States.

Gary Kleck is a Professor of Criminology and Criminal Justice at Florida State University. His research has focused on violence, crime control, and the impact of firearms and gun control on violence. He has published widely in journals, and his Point Blank: Guns and Violence in America won the 1993 Michael J. Hindelang Award of the American Society of Criminology.

Richard A. Leo is an Assistant Professor of Sociology and Adjoint Professor of Law at the University of Colorado, Boulder. He is currently completing a book on the sociology of police interrogation practices in America.

Colin Loftin is Professor, School of Criminal Justice, University at Albany, State University of New York. Prior to September 1966 he was Professor and Director of the Violence Research Group, Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, University of Maryland at College Park. His interests include investigating the patterns, causes, and consequences of interpersonal violence.

David McDowall is Professor, School of Criminal Justice, University at Albany, State University of New York. Prior to September 1966 he was Professor and Associate Director of the Violence Research Group, Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, University of Maryland at College Park. He is interested in statistical methods, program evaluation, and the social distribution of criminal violence.

Ronen Shamir is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Tel-Aviv University. Author of Managing Legal Uncertainty (Duke University Press 1995), he is currently engaged in research on patterns of cause lawyering in Israel and the origins of the Israeli legal system in Mandatory Palestine.

Mary Lyndon (Molly) Shanley teaches in the Department of Political Science at Vassar College. She is author of Feminism, Marriage and the Law in Victorian England (Princeton University Press) and editor, with Carole Pateman, of Feminist Interpretations and Political Theory (Polity Press and Penn State Press). She is currently writing a book about ethical issues in contemporary family law.

Brian Wiersema is Research Coordinator for the Violence Research , Group, Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, University of Maryland at College Park. He is interested in violence, measurement, and computer methods for social research.