

---

About the Authors

---

Regina Austin is Professor of Law, University of Pennsylvania. Her current research interest is the black informal economy.

Paul Burstein is Professor of Sociology and Adjunct Professor of Political Science at the University of Washington. He is the author of a book and many articles about the struggle for equal employment opportunity. In addition to continuing that work, he is currently analyzing how federal policies regulating gender, employment, and family have changed since 1945, focusing on cultural, organizational, and ideological sources of policy change.

Kitty Calavita is Associate Professor of Criminology/Law and Society in the School of Social Ecology at the University of California, Irvine. She has written extensively on immigration policy, administrative lawmaking, and white-collar crime. Her latest book is Inside the State: The Bracero Program, Immigration, and the INS (Routledge, Chapman & Hall, 1992).

Patricia Ewick is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Clark University. She is the author of several articles on regulation and the social control of organizations. Her current research focuses on the dailyness of law. She is working on a nationally funded study of legal consciousness among ordinary American citizens.

Joel F. Handler is a Professor of Law at UCLA Law School. His major interests are poverty and social welfare programs.

John P. Heinz is Distinguished Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation and the Owen L. Coon Professor of Law and Professor of Sociology (by courtesy) at Northwestern University and is affiliated with Northwestern's Center for Urban Affairs and Policy Research. He is co-author with Edward O. Laumann of Chicago Lawyers: The Social Structure of the Bar, which in 1987 was awarded the Harry Kalven Prize of the Law and Society Association. He is also co-author (with Laumann, Robert L. Nelson, and Robert H. Salisbury) of The Hollow Core: Private Interests in National Policy Making (Harvard University Press, 1993). His principal research interests are the roles of elites in policymaking and the politics of law reform.

Allan C. Hutchinson is Professor of Law, Osgoode Hall Law School, York University, Toronto. He is author of Dwelling on the Threshold: Critical Essays on Modern Legal Thought and other books and articles on jurisprudence, constitutional law, and torts from an interdisciplinary perspective. He is currently completing a book on a postmodern critique of law and rights.

Mindie Lazarus-Black is Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice and Affiliate Assistant Professor of Anthropology at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Her scholarship focuses on the history and ethnography of class, kinship, gender, and the law in the West Indies and the United States. Her publications include Legitimate Acts and Illegal Encounters (forthcoming Smithsonian Institution Press).

Stewart Macaulay is Malcolm Pittman Sharp Professor of the University of Wisconsin–Madison and Foley & Lardner Professor of Law. A past president of the Law and Society Association who only a few years ago also gave a presidential address, he is co-author with Lawrence Friedman of two editions of Law and the Behavioral Sciences (one of the first collections of teaching materials in the field) and has written several landmark articles on law and social sciences. He is currently working (with Lawrence Friedman and John Stookey) on a new volume, Materials for the Social Study of Law. He is a long-time fan of the University of Wisconsin hockey team and a collector of Duke Ellington records.

Peter M. Manikas, a member of the Illinois Bar, is Executive Director of the Illinois Supreme Court's Special Commission on the Administration of Justice. He previously served on the faculty of Northwestern University's Center for Urban Affairs and Policy Research. He is the author of several articles on criminal justice issues. His main research interests are criminal justice policymaking and administration.

Michael W. McCann is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Washington. His research focuses generally on law, legal mobilization, and the politics of social movements. He is the author of Taking Reform Seriously: Perspectives on Public Interest Liberalism (1986) and Rights at Work: Law and the Politics of Pay Equity (forthcoming in 1994). He is currently writing several essays on the relationship between different forms of social movement organization and the varying roles of cause lawyers.

Carroll Seron is Associate Professor in the School of Business and Public Administration at Baruch College, City University of New York. She is the co-author with Wolf Heydebrand of the recently published Rationalizing Justice (SUNY Press, 1990). In addition, she is completing a study of attorneys in solo and small firm legal practice.

Jonathan L. Simon is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan and Visiting Associate Professor of Law at the University of Miami. His work focuses on the role of law in the construction and reproduction of social norms. He is the author of Poor Discipline: Parole and the Social Control of the Underclass, 1890–1990 (University of Chicago Press, forthcoming 1993). He is currently at work on a study of the role of risk management practices and actuarial knowledge in transforming the exercise of power in contemporary society.

Steven L. Winter is Professor of Law at the University of Miami. He has published numerous articles on legal metaphor, the significance of cognitive sciences to law and legal theory, and the interpenetration of law, culture, and cognition.