

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

RICHARD A. BERK is Professor of Sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He has published widely in the fields of collective behavior and evaluation research, and his most recent work has been in the sociology of law. He also consults in litigation where social science data are particularly relevant.

CHARLES A. JOHNSON is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Texas A&M University. His fields of interest are judicial impact analysis and judicial behavior, and he has published articles on these topics. His current research deals with the impact of the U.S. Supreme Court's abortion decisions.

STEWART MACAULAY is Professor of Law at the University of Wisconsin, Madison and Co-Associate Editor of this Review. He is coauthor of Law and the Behavioral Sciences and has written numerous articles about business practices related to the law of contracts, and on other topics in law and the behavioral sciences.

MICHAEL MANDEL is Associate Professor at Osgoode Hall Law School of York University in Toronto, where he teaches legal philosophy and criminal law. He is a member of the Law Union of Ontario, a "coalition of progressive and socialist lawyers, law students, and legal workers."

JERROLD OPPENHEIM is Director of Consumer Law at Community Action for Legal Services, the umbrella agency for federally funded legal services in New York City. Previously he served as director of business regulation litigation at the Legal Assistance Foundation of Chicago. His litigation on behalf of poor people has involved challenging utility rate increases and civil rights violations by private businesses.

ROBERT POOLMAN is on leave from the Department of Sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He is currently manager of information systems at the Department of Mental Health, Santa Barbara County, California.

THOMAS STONE is Associate Professor of Anthropology at the State University of New York College at Potsdam. He received his AB from Dartmouth College and his PhD from Cornell University. His current research interests include the development of law in Canada's North West Territories during the 19th century.