Clarendon Aristotle Series

Aristotle's Politics: Books III and IV

Translated by

RICHARD ROBINSON

This first volume of a new series contains the two books of Aristotle's Politics that are most important for political philosophy today. The translation is intentionally very close; there is an Introduction, and the translator has provided summaries of the 'chapters' and comments on most of them.

The Later Philosophy of R. G. Collingwood

ALAN DONAGAN

A critical study of Collingwood's philosophical work from 1933 to his death in 1943. After 1930, although developing, his philosophy of art, natural science, psychology and history remained fundamentally the same while his conception of philosophy changed bewilderingly. The author offers a controversial explanation of why Collingwood abandoned his earlier position.

Simone Weil: Selected
Essays 1934-1943

Chosen and translated by

RICHARD REES

Thirteen essays selected and translated from two important collections of the writings of Simone Weil, who died in 1943. 'This is obviously the work of a genius. . . . The author is so intelligent, and so moved by love—the two facts cannot be dissociated—that even the most fragmentary essays are illuminating; while those on "Human Personality", and on "The Power of Words" bring together a range of insight and suffering beyond the reach of normal experience, and astonish one in almost every sentence.' A History of Greek Philosophy, Volume I

W. K. C. GUTHRIE

The history of Greek philosophy is a description of the formative period of our own thought. In the first comprehensive account of it to appear in English since 1909, Professor Guthrie writes mainly for students of classics and philosophy. The first of the five volumes proposed deals with the period from the Milesian school to the Pythagoreans and Heraclitus.
