Volume IV in the series "British Official Documents on the Origins of the War" is one of the most interesting of the series, for its subject matter is the growth of the understanding between Russia and Great Britain which was ultimately to ripen into open alliance. The extraordinary difficulty of the task and the slow and painful steps by which it was accomplished can be very well gathered from this new volume of confidential and unprinted state papers. The narrative is enlivened by incidents of crisis such as the sinking of a British fishing fleet by the Russian navy in time of peace and the violation of the Dardanelles by the Russian volunteer fleet, full accounts of which are now given for the first time. There is also interesting detail relating to the Emperor Nicholas and the influences by which he was surrounded, while the separate chapters on Thibet, Persia, and Afghanistan are specially valuable from the standpoint of present day problems. The minutes and memoranda of King Edward VII on the general development of events are numerous and of very great interest and valuable private correspondence of Sir Edward Grey is also included.
