Slow Death for Slavery

The Course of Abolition in Northern Nigeria, 1897–1936

Paul E. Lovejoy and Jan S. Hogendorn

This book examines the decline of slavery in Northern Nigeria during the first forty years of colonial rule. Rather than emancipate slaves, the state abolished the legal status of slavery, encouraging them to buy their freedom. Since many were unable to do so, slavery was not abolished until 1936.

Patterns of Thought in Africa and the West

Magic, Religion and Science

Robin Horton

Anthropologist Robin Horton is widely regarded as one of the most creative and critical thinkers of his generation. This collection of some of his classic papers on African religion is also a wide-ranging inquiry into religious thought, particularly its relationship to aesthetic and scientific thought.

Burundi: Ethnocide as Discourse and Practice

René LeMarchand

This book situates Burundi in the current global debate on ethnicity by describing and analyzing the wholesale massacre of the Hutu majority by the Tutsi minority. The author refutes the government's version of these events and offers documentation that identifies the source of these massacres as occurring across a socially constructed fault-line.

The Significance of Schooling

Life-Journeys in an African Society

Robert Serpell

A case study of a rural African community, this book contrasts the indigenous perspective on child development with the formal educational model of cognitive growth. The significance of schooling for each of the diverse individual life-journeys of the study cohort is discussed in terms of his or her own reflections and interpretations.

West African Slavery and Atlantic Commerce: The Senegal River Valley, 1700–1860

James F. Searing

The author shows how the societies of West Africa were transformed by the slave trade. The growth of the Atlantic trade stimulated the development of slavery within the region. This local slave system had far-reaching consequences, leading to religious protest and slave rebellions.

NKRUMAH'S GHANA AND EAST AFRICA
Pan-Africanism and African Interstate Relations

OPOKU AGYEMAN

The book sets out to explore the impact of Ghana's Kwame Nkrumah on the subregion of East Africa in the period between the independence of Ghana in March 1957 and the overthrow in 1966 of his government by the Ghanaian military. Guided by his conception of Pan-Africanism, Nkrumah sought to affect the ideological and political disposition of Julius Nyerere, Jomo Kenyatta, and Milton Obote, and the states they represented: Tanganyika (later Tanzania), Kenya, and Uganda respectively.

The book reinforces the verdict that Pan-Africanism in the Nkrumah era represented the most important indigenous political force on the African continent. $38.50

STRUGGLE FOR KENYA
The Loss and Reassertion of Imperial Initiative, 1912-1923

ROBERT M. MAXON

Struggle for Kenya details the evolution of British policy toward Kenya for the period 1912 to 1923. This was a particularly important time, for during the First World War, London lost the initiative in imperial affairs to Kenya's colonial state and European settlers. The postwar era dawned with the possibility that a settler state might take root in Kenya. However, this possibility touched off an intense struggle over imperial policy toward Kenya, and the direction in which the colony seemed to be heading. Protest and pressure from diverse groups helped push the imperial government to reassert control over Kenya. $47.50

IMAGINING ETHIOPIA

Struggles for History and Identity in the Horn of Africa

JOHN SORENSON

"Sorenson takes a unique perspective in looking at Ethiopia in history as well as in contemporary discourse."

—Edmond J. Keller,
University of California, Los Angeles

Sorenson examines Western mass media images of Ethiopia, placing them in the context of a larger discourse on the Third World. He shows how our image of Ethiopia has been developed by reporters and photographers who blamed the famine on African backwardness and ignored its historical and political causes, which include a colonial history, militarization, and the circumstances of Africa's integration into the world market.

AFRICAN ENCOUNTERS WITH DOMESTICITY

KAREN TRANBERG HANSEN, EDITOR

"A significant empirical and theoretical contribution to studies of colonial and postcolonial societies."—Margaret Strobel, University of Illinois at Chicago

The contributors to this interdisciplinary collection of papers demonstrate that domesticity, as it emerged in Africa through the colonial encounter, was culturally constructed, and they show how ideologies of work, space, and gender interact with broader political-economic processes. The contributors examine how African women and men have selectively appropriated, redefined, and transformed such Western gender-marked phenomena as labor, space, sexuality, child care, food, and hygiene, invoking hierarchies of gender and power that at times differ from those of the West.
