The Antiquaries Journal, 2024, pp 1–37
doi:10.1017/S0003581524000180

BOOKS KEPT AT THE SHRINE OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY IN THE LATE MIDDLE AGES

Matthew Payne, FSA

Matthew Payne, The Chapter Office, 20 Dean's Yard, London SW1P 3PA, UK. Email: matthew.payne@westminster-abbey.org

Three late medieval inventories of the chapel surrounding the shrine of St Edward the Confessor at Westminster Abbey, London, record the presence of a number of books and pamphlets among the relics and liturgical paraphernalia. This article discusses these books, their significance and the reason for their maintenance at the shrine, and offers possible identifications with several surviving manuscripts.

Keywords: shrine; manuscripts; books; Westminster Abbey; chronicles; Edward the Confessor

INTRODUCTION

The shrine of Edward the Confessor (r 1042–66), behind the high altar, formed the most sacred space within Westminster Abbey (fig 1). The chapel that surrounds it was chosen by many of the Confessor's successors, from Henry III (r 1216–72) onwards, as their final resting place, thus creating a royal mausoleum at the heart of the church. In addition, its sanctity and importance encouraged it as the space in which the abbey's most holy objects were stored.[1]

The collection of relics held by the abbey was unique. It included the shrine itself (a relic and reliquary in its own right), the Holy Blood relic acquired by Henry III and translated to the abbey with much ceremony in 1247, the girdle of the Virgin given to the church by Edward the Confessor and a panoply of saintly relics reflecting the patronage of kings and queens from the tenth century onwards.[2] In the 1440s, the abbey's chronicler, Fr John Flete, diligently listed them as part of his history of the church,[3] but the relics were not the only objects stored in the Confessor's chapel. In addition to the array of vestments, silver, textiles and assorted furniture required for worship, a number of books were also kept in this holy space. While some of them were predictable liturgical works required for divine office, they included a number of less obvious manuscripts, whose function in this space is not immediately clear.

1. For the relics stored here, see Luxford 2019. The relics were certainly stored there by 1346, when offerings to them there are recorded by the sacrist, WAM 19622. They were probably settled there from much earlier. The sacrist was directed by the 1260s customary to appoint one of the four sub-sacrists to have care of the high altar and the relics: Thompson 1904, ii, 52.
2. For the holy blood relic (and others), see Vincent 2001.
3. Robinson 1909, 68–73.

Fig 1. The Shrine of Westminster Abbey. Image: reproduced by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

Westminster was not alone in keeping manuscripts in such sacred spaces. At Lichfield, for example, 'two very old books which are called the books of St Chad' were kept at the shrine.[4] At Durham, the shrine keeper kept the 'Book of St Cuthbert', as well as the expected psalters and missals, and gospels with copies of the Life of St Cuthbert.[5] In 1383–4 the Durham shrine keeper also acquired parchment for 'chronicles and rolls and other necessaries', and the following year paid 17s 5d for the 'writing of chronicles and

4. Cox 1886, 204. See also Nilson 1998, 52.
5. In 1383–4 he purchased a chain for it: Fowler 1898–1901, ii, 425, 432. I am grateful to Dr John Jenkins for this reference.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

emending psalters and for nailing rings to the feretory'.[6] In 1441–2 Durham listed books at the shrine that included a volume containing excerpts of history, the 'chronica martini', and other ecclesiastical historical material.[7] At Canterbury, from 1428 the shrine keepers maintained a customary, bound with two thirteenth-century lives of St Thomas Becket.[8] Other books could be kept nearby, often behind the high altar.[9] But the nature of the books kept at the Confessor's shrine, and our ability to identify some of the surviving manuscripts, makes this a study of particular importance.

INVENTORIES

On 21 December 1467, the Feast of St Thomas the Apostle, the outgoing shrine keeper Fr Thomas Arundel formally delivered up to his successor, Fr Richard Tedyngton, the collection of chests, altar furnishings and relics in his custody.[10] To witness the agreement, he compiled an inventory of the objects that were to be handed over to Tedyngton, in the form of a tripartite indenture.[11] The urge to formalise the process was doubtless prompted by the disarray within the monastery following the resignation from active duties of Abbot Norwich the previous month, on grounds of financial mismanagement.[12] In his absence, the prior, Thomas Millyng, and two senior monks, William Chertsey and John Estney, were appointed to manage the abbey, until Norwich died two years later, at which point Millyng could be formally appointed his successor.[13] In addition, the sacrist, Fr Thomas Ruston, was accused of pilfering and pawning items from the sacristy, possibly in support of Abbot Norwich, and summarily removed from all offices.[14] In the light of such events, it is perfectly natural that an audit of items at the shrine should be undertaken, and that Arundel would wish to protect himself from any future charges.

The 1467 inventory is the earliest of such inventories to survive complete, but is complemented by two later examples, produced in 1479 and 1520.[15] In 1467 fourteen books were recorded by Arundel as being stored within the Confessor's chapel. All but one

6. Ibid, 425, 441. According to the Liber de Reliquiis, compiled in 1383, books in his custody also included 'Gallorum historia' and 'liber qui vocatur Polustor hystoriarum, Gaii Julii et . . . ini', presumably works of Alexander Polyhistor's historical and geographical works of the ancient world, together with works of Gaius Julius Hyginus.
7. Ibid, 471.
8. BL, Add MS 59616.
9. At St Paul's Cathedral in the 12th century there were cupboards for books beside the high altar: Keene et al 2004, 413; the Priory of Christ Church Canterbury likewise kept books above the high altar from an early date: Collinson et al 1995, 341.
10. There is a curious discrepancy, as Tedyngton is recorded in the sacrist's accounts as occupying the position of shrine keeper from 1464 onwards, with no mention of Arundel. Given Tedyngton's broken service as warden of the manors of Queen Eleanor (see Appendix 1), it may be that he relinquished the role briefly in late 1467, during the disruptive period covered below.
11. WAM 9477.
12. See Pearce 1916, 141–2, 145–6; Westlake 1923, i, 147–9.
13. For Millyng, see Pearce 1916, 152–3; Emden 1958, II, 1,282–3.
14. WAM 5456, the notarial instrument for the removal of Abbot Norwich, which cites these charges against Ruston. Both Tedyngton and Arundel put their names to the deposition. The following year Ruston removed from Westminster to become prior of Hurley, a dependent of Westminster: see Smith 2008, 122.
15. Tedyngton's 1479 inventory, WAM 9478, is printed by Luxford 2019, 227–30; that compiled by Grene in 1520 is WAM 9485 and is printed in two sections in Westlake 1923, ii, 499–501, 504–5.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

of these are listed in the upper section of the inventory, among the vestments and plate, as follows:

> Also ij massebokys. Also vj bokys for seint Edward*es* masse on Sondays to syng on. Also ij bokys of cronycles on callyd polycronicon & þe oþ*er* callyd flores historiar*um*. Also a portos of salysbury use. Also ij quayers on w*ith* collect*es* & gospel for our lady gyrdyll, Anoþ*er* of þe relyquys.

The lower section of the inventory, which is concerned with the relics themselves, includes one further book, 'a saut*er* of Seint Edward'.

Twelve years later, the inventory compiled by Tedyngton himself at the end of his term as shrine keeper follows Arundel's wording, except that he recorded that the 'portaus of Salesbury use, the which was lost by sir Richard Widevyle in þe tyme of þe dan Richard Tedyngton'. As Julian Luxford has pointed out, the portable breviary had clearly been made available 'for the use of distinguished lay visitors'.[16] Sir Richard Woodville, the 'greedy and grasping' father of the queen, died on 12 August 1469, so this misadventure had presumably happened between Tedyngton's second appointment to the position of shrine keeper in 1467 and this date, a period when Woodville was Constable of England.[17] The circumstances surrounding the disappearance must be a matter of speculation, but it is perhaps not coincidental that the king's third daughter (and therefore Woodville's granddaughter) was baptised in the abbey soon after her birth in the Palace of Westminster on 20 March 1469.[18] The prior, Fr Thomas Millyng, deputing for the dismissed Abbot Norwich, probably stood godfather to Princess Cecily, just as he was to do the following year to her brother Edward.[19] Woodville's appropriation of the breviary was perhaps in character.[20] The previous year he had been involved in a legal scandal over the persecution of the former mayor of London, Sir Thomas Cook. His servants were accused of

16. Luxford 2019, 11.
17. Ross 1974, 97.
18. The accounts of the warden of the new work record that in 1468–9 four loads of timber for the scaffold were not available because of the timber left at the baptism of the king's daughter, WAM 23533*.
19. Pearce 1916, 152–3. Elizabeth Woodville had taken sanctuary in the abbot's house on 1 Oct 1470, where she gave birth to her son a month later and had him also baptised in the abbey. Richard Woodville was by this time dead, but his widow, Jacquetta of Luxemburg, certainly accompanied her daughter into sanctuary at Westminster and probably attended Edward's baptism as well: Pascual 2011, 83.
20. Woodville was actively seeking out manuscripts at the time. In 1466 he bought in London a 14th-century manuscript of the Romance of Alexander: Bodleian, MS Bodley 264. He also owned other manuscripts, including a splendid copy of Jean de Meun, Sept articles de la foy, produced in Rouen in the 1440s, now BL, Royal MS 19 A. xxii; and a manuscript of Richard Rolle's Emendatio vitae together with Hugo Ripelinus, Compendium veritaties theologicae, Bodleian, MS Bodley 456. His wife, Jacquetta of Luxemburg, owned a copy of Christine de Pizan's works (BL, Harley MS 4431) as well as a copy of Gower's Confessio Amantis (Pembroke College, MS 307) and, possibly, a collection of material relating to crusades and the Holy Land, BL, Cotton MS Otho D.ii; see Pascual 2011, 87–8. A prayerbook, now known as the Prayerbook of Elizabeth of York but said to have been owned by his daughter Elizabeth Woodville, is also inscribed 'Westminster abbaye' twice, suggesting it may have originated or been used there; Stanford University Library, Codex 0877. Elizabeth also owned a copy of Confessio Amantis (Pierpont Morgan Library, MS M.126); see Driver 2009.

ransacking Cook's London house, while Cook himself was in prison for treason, and making off with enormous quantities of expensive cloths and precious jewels and plate.[21]

By 1520 the number of relics had grown considerably, but the quantity of books was reduced. Only one massbook then survived, together with the six books of St Edward's mass. But no mention is made of the chronicles, nor the two quires or pamphlets. The loss of the breviary by Sir Richard Woodville is no longer required to be recorded. Conversely, an acquisition had been made in the form of 'a paper masseboke of Salisbury use, of William Caxton gyfte'. No mention is made of the psalter among the relics, although 'an olde sawterboke of parchement' was then listed among the vestments. The gift by Caxton of a mass book may have formed part of his will (which does not survive).[22] It probably refers to a copy of the Missale Saresberiense, printed in Paris by Guillame Maynyal for William Caxton on 4 December 1487.[23]

The rather more wide-ranging inventory of the abbey drawn up at the Dissolution, after all of the relics had gone, makes no mention of books being present in the chapel at all.[24] This is understandable if, as the 1520 list suggests, only liturgical manuscripts remained in the chapel at that date. These would inevitably have been disposed of swiftly, before the assessors arrived, as symbols of the saintly cult no longer acceptable. But there is some evidence that the inventories may not have been the complete audit one might have hoped for. In 1485 William Caxton recorded in his prologue to La Morte d'Arthur that evidence for the historical existence of King Arthur could be found in a number of places. Among these evidential objects was an impression of the seal of the king, which was to be found at the shrine of St Edward the Confessor at Westminster: 'in the abbey of westmestre at saynt Edwardes shrine remayneth the prynte of his seal in reed wax closed in beryl, In which is wryton Patricius Arthurus Britannie Gallie Germanie dacie Imperator'.[25] It is not clear why such a venerable object was not listed among the items handed on by the shrine keeper in 1479 or 1520. That the seal impression remained at the shrine is attested firstly by John Rastell in 1530, who had been shown the seal.[26] Rastell used it as evidence in his assessment of the historical existence of Arthur.[27] In 1544 John Leland also recorded a visit to Westminster to inspect it.[28] What the seal's fate was we do not know, but it is clear that such an object was to be found in the shrine keeper's custody from at least the late fifteenth to the mid-sixteenth century, even if not recorded in the monastery's inventories. The seal impression was doubtless produced to provide further evidence for the link between the coronation church and the symbol of English kingship. This link had already been drawn upon. After the suppression of the revolt of Llywelyn in Wales in 1283, Edward I received

21. For this episode, see Sutton 1978.
22. Caxton bequeathed sixteen copies from his stock of 'legends' to his parish church, St Margaret's Westminster. These were subsequently sold by the churchwarden: Nixon 1976, 314–17. In addition, he left copies of The Life of St Katherine and John Lydgate's Life of Our Lady to the Fraternity of the Assumption, based in St Margaret's.
23. ISTC im00719200. The only near-complete copy of this volume was acquired by the National Trust in 2008 for Lyme Park. For Caxton's involvement with Maynyal and importation of books from France in this period, see Payne 2016, 110–12.
24. TNA, PRO, LR/2/111, fols 8–27; Walcott 1873, 350–2.
25. Crotch 1928, 93. In the early 15th century, the University of Cambridge invented a foundation myth based on King Arthur, and produced an Arthurian charter as evidence, see Hiatt 2004, 84–8.
26. Ditmas 1964, 29–30.
27. Rastell 1530, 53r–v.
28. Leland 1582, 12–13.

various treasured relics as tokens of submission, among them the Welsh prince's crown. This was purported to be the crown of King Arthur. The following year, Edward's young son Alfonso apparently presented the crown and other jewels to the Shrine of the Confessor.[29] What became of this royal relic is unknown; no further mention of it is made. In early 1440 the abbey's sacrist, Edmund Kyrton, paid for the embellishment or replacement of a screen on the west side of the chapel of St Andrew, at the end of the north transept. This was ornamented by a series of coats of arms, mostly of leading contemporary political figures (and inserting his own arms among them). The upper register boasted in the centre the Trinity, with the abbey's own arms on the left (with King Henry VI's next), and those of King Arthur on the right, adjacent to Kyrton's patron, Duke Humphrey of Gloucester.[30]

Although the 1467 inventory is the earliest complete inventory for the shrine to survive, that the practice of compiling such documents had a longer history is confirmed by two fragmentary strips of another inventory that, at some point in the fifteenth century, were used to form a thin 'spine' to support a manuscript of De Scismate, a short treatise on the schism within the church.[31] These fragments come from adjacent strips in the top centre of the inventory. Although little text remains, there is enough to indicate that the original document formed an inventory of relics and related items being handed over (liberavit) from Fr John Bassingbourne to another monk, only the name 'Ralph' of which is shown. John Bassingbourne joined the abbey in 1387–8, and served as treasurer and kitchener in 1409–14, at which point he disappears from the records (presumably he died, although he may have moved elsewhere).[32] The recipient was probably Fr Ralph Toneworth, who entered in 1379–80, and served first as revestiarius (or vestry keeper) in the early 1390s, sacrist in 1399–1411, warden of the new work, 1400–11, and died probably in 1420.[33] This would suggest Bassingbourne was handing over to Toneworth in the 1390s, possibly as revestiarius. Little enough of the inventory itself survives to assist greatly, although there are mentions of frontals and a grid-iron; a number of largely unidentified saintly bones and ribs, some kept in purses (demonstrating that, at least at this date, relics were not kept exclusively in the Confessor's chapel); cloths and towels and other accoutrements. Since neither Bassingbourne nor Toneworth served as shrine keeper (see Appendix 1), this presumably indicates that these were items held at one of the other chapels in the abbey.[34]

29. However, it is interesting to note that the Westminster chronicle, the Flores Historiarum, while recording the acquisition of Arthur's crown by Edward in 1283, makes no mention of its presentation to the shrine; see Luard 1890, III, 59. A number of other chronicles follow suit. It is the Annales Londinienses that describes Alfonso's bestowal ('ornavit') of the crown and other jewels to the 'feretrum Sancti Edwardi', but calls it only the crown of Llywelyn, making no mention of King Arthur: Stubbs 1882, 92. For (incomplete) discussions, see Loomis 1953, 117; Ditmas 1964, 28.
30. The construction of the screen almost certainly formed part of Kyrton's successful campaign for the abbacy, to replace the ailing Abbot Harwedon. The screen was pulled down in c 1723, but two representations of it have survived, a drawing of 1722 (Westminster Abbey Library, CN.7.I.32), and a heraldic scheme in the manuscript of the antiquarian Henry Keepe's Monumenta Westmonasteriensia, c 1682 (Westminster Abbey Library MS 45, 141–2).
31. Westminster Abbey MS 34/2. See Ker 1969, i, 402.
32. See Pearce 1916, 123.
33. Ibid, 116.
34. The inventory might relate to material in the sacristy, except that the inventory drawn up in 1388 makes no mention of relics. The mention of a grid-iron might point to the chapel of St Faith, who is pictured on the east wall holding one. This chapel, at the south end of the south transept,

SHRINE KEEPERS

The office of shrine keeper (custos feretri) and keeper of the relics (custos reliquiarum), terms which seem to have been used interchangeably, and sometimes in conjunction, was established at Westminster by at least the mid-thirteenth century.[35] He had charge of the shrine itself, the relics and associated paraphernalia that were housed in the Confessor's chapel, and he accounted for the oblations that were received there.[36] He also seems to have managed the oblations received elsewhere in the church, other than at certain designated altars. Some other duties accrued. From 1352, by decree of the Abbot Simon Langham, he was to serve a loving cup to the brethren on the Feast of the Translation of St Edward (13 October).[37] He was one of the monks overseen by the sacrist, from whom he generally received an allowance to carry out his duties. This was usually 40s per annum, double the allowance made over to the sacrist's other officials, the revestiarius and subsacrist, which presumably reflected the status of his role.[38]

Although the shrine keeper maintained his own accounts, none have survived.[39] From a comparison of office-holders, it is clear that there was a close overlap between the shrine keeper and the warden of the foundation established by Edward I on the death of his wife, Queen Eleanor (see Appendix 1).[40] From the fourteenth century onwards, most holders of the former role also served as one of the wardens of the latter at the same time, to such an extent that it seems reasonable to conclude that the two offices were generally thought of as going together. Given the location of Queen Eleanor's tomb on the north-eastern side of the Confessor's chapel, directly adjacent to the Holy Trinity altar where the relics were stored, and the primacy afforded to the foundation as the most important such royal fund to be established after the rebuilding of the abbey church, the connection is understandable.[41]

LITURGICAL MANUSCRIPTS

Westminster Abbey inevitably boasted a large number of liturgical manuscripts, to maintain divine office at the many altars throughout the church.[42] While such books were usually provided by the precentor, the sacrist appears to have had charge of the upkeep of many of them, and his accounts make occasional references to these ongoing was also used as a vestry, so would fit the role of the revestiarius. For this chapel, see Binski and Guerry 2015.

35. Thompson 1904, 52–3.
36. In the two earliest surviving sacrist's rolls, for 1318 and 1347, the offerings at the shrine and the relics (with the high altar) are treated separately. For the levels of offerings, see Nilson 1998, 229–31.
37. Pearce 1916, 93.
38. The sacrist's accounts record his annual payment, as well as his rendering account for oblations.
39. The sacrist's accounts make reference to the shrine keeper's accounts in delivering the oblations; see for example WAM 19710, where in 1459–60 the sacrist accounted for 100s as oblations received at the shrine by the account of John Ramsey, 'keeper there'.
40. For the foundation, see Harvey 2002, 139–41. Elements of the foundation were in fact begun during Eleanor's life, see Harvey 1977, 31–2, 393.
41. For Edward I's establishment of the fund, see Calendar of Charter Rolls, II, 411.
42. See Pfaff 2009, 227–36.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

costs.[43] In 1388, after the sacristy had been rebuilt, an inventory was compiled by Fr Richard Cirencester, Fr William Sudbury, Fr John Breynt and Fr Ralph Tonworth.[44] In this are listed seventeen 'missals and other books', along with a number of well-ornamented copies of the gospels (textus).[45] Foremost among the service books was the Litlyngton Missal ('unum bonum missale et grande ex dono quondam Nicholai Lytlington abbatis'), compiled at the abbey in 1383–4 for use in major services (fig 2).[46] The sacristy housed other missals, including one given by Abbot William Curtlyngton (abbot 1315–33), and another by Fr John Mordon in 1354/5.[47] Since all of these were valuable manuscripts, there was at least one other missal for daily use at the high altar.[48] Other service books listed include two psalters, one the gift of Henry III, and the second 'cum diversis ymaginibus depictis post kalendare'. The latter can be identified as the Westminster Psalter (fig 3),[49] a book of various liturgical elements, including prayers, calculations for Easter, litany and a calendar (fols 5r–10v) with the Feast of St Edward written in gold. A benedictional listed may well be in the Bodleian Library, Oxford,[50] a fourteenth-century pontifical, with ordines and benedictions on a range of activities, including coronations, baptism and consecrations.[51] In 1399 a 'great new book' was made for the middle of the choir. This was funded by a number of the monks, with Fr Elmin Merston entering the musical notation himself. Using the money contributed, the sacrist acquired sixty-one skins of

43. Thompson 1904, 49. At Westminster we are greatly hindered in our understanding of the role of books within the church by the entire absence of the records of the precentors, see Harvey 2002, 129–30.
44. For the sacristy, see Payne and Foster 2020. The inventory is now Canterbury Cathedral, Canterbury, MS Y.ax. It was printed in Legg 1890. It is notable that the inventory was not drawn up by the sacrist, Fr Peter Combe, suggesting a level of external oversight of the office. Cirencester was the senior monk, being at the time refectorer; Sudbury was not long returned from his studies in Oxford; Breynt was only just promoted 'ad skillam'; while Tonworth was the only one directly involved in the workings of the sacristy, being then revestiarius; see Pearce 1916, 24–5, 100, 113–14, 116.
45. Legg 1890, 39–41.
46. Westminster Abbey MS 37. An edition of the missal was published in Legg 1891–6. For the Litlyngton Missal more generally, see Sandler 1986, ii, 172–5; Tudor-Craig 1998; Wackett 2014. Reflecting the personal nature of the book, the compilation of the missal was paid for through the abbot's treasurer, not the sacrist (WAM 24265*). This included £4 6s 8d for parchment alone, £22 0s 3d for illuminations of the large letters and £4 to Thomas Preston for scribal work. In 1509, in readiness for either the funeral of Henry VII or the coronation of Henry VIII, it was lavishly rebound by the sacrist, at a cost of 4s 8d for the binding work, 2s 5d for the buck skin and 12d for two red skins for the lining, WAM 19764. Three years earlier, the volume had been mended and new clasps affixed, WAM 19761.
47. In 1354/5 Morden's accounts as sacrist record the payment of £11 3s for 'a missal made for the high altar at his own expense', WAM 19623. Although less than a third of the cost of the Litlyngton Missal, this must still have been a lavish production.
48. Inevitably these regularly-used volumes required frequent repair. In 1387/8, 5s was spent on repair for the missal and a lectionary (WAM 19645); 8s 8d for binding work in 1443/4 (WAM 19692); 16s 6d for general repairs in 1497/8 (WAM 19752); and various binding work to books at the high altar in 1526/7 (WAM 19796).
49. BL, Royal MS 2 A.xxii.
50. Bodleian, MS Rawl.C.425.
51. In the early 16th century, Fr Thomas Brown added his name. Brown was professed at Westminster in 1485–6, and occupied various positions, including warden of the manors of Queen Eleanor from 1508, before his death in 1513–14; Pearce 1916, 171–2. Brown may have acquired the book when a new benedictional was compiled for regular use in 1491/2, which the sacrist paid to have bound and fitted with clasps (WAM 19741).

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 2. Litlyngton Missal, Westminster Abbey MS 37. Image: reproduced by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

vellum, costing 28s 6d, and commissioned John Hervyngton to do the scribal work and John Fouler the illumination. The overall cost of the volume was £5 10s 8d.[52] A further contribution of 6s 8d was made by John Godmerston (d 1401), the king's clerk of the works for the major project at Westminster Hall, and recently-appointed chancellor of St Paul's.[53]

52. WAM Muniment Book I, fol 92r.
53. For his appointment as chancellor in 1397, see CPR 1396–9, 67; Horn 1963, 19. For his appointment as clerk of the works in 1394, see CPR 1391–6, 348–9. He already had experience of overseeing building works during his time as canon of Hereford Cathedral, CCR 1385–9, 535. In 1396 he was also appointed the office of chamberlain of the Exchequer of Receipt, CPR 1391–6, 695, and he was later given various prebends and benefices. He was one of the executors of John Gilbert, Bishop of St David's, CCR 1399–1402, 121. In April 1399 he was rewarded for his service at Westminster with a canonry at St Stephen's Chapel: Biggs 2016, 285. He purchased

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 3. Westminster Psalter, BL, Royal MS 2 A.xxii. Image: courtesy British Library.

All of these were high status manuscripts for use at the high altar and for major services, and stored, when not in use, in the sacristy. They are separate from those items in the custody of the shrine keeper in the fifteenth century. Indeed, most of the items listed in 1388 can be identified as still being stored there when the assessors came in 1540, although inevitably new books had been added in the intervening century and a half. This included a 'gospell booke' compiled by Fr John Langham, who entered the monastery in 1501/2, and himself served as shrine keeper in 1528,[54] and a copy of the Liber Regalis ('Boke of books of his own: five liturgical books (and possibly other non-liturgical) from the estate of Thomas of Woodcock for the large sum of £24, including a missal at £8 and a breviary at £10, as well as a pair of silver basins: Stratford 2010, 168–71, and 2012, 410. These sums suggest manuscripts at least as lavish as those being acquired by the abbey itself.

54. Pearce 1916, 179.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Coronacyons of Kynges'), although not the copy now among the abbey collections.[55] Some of these books occasionally required attention. In 1391/2 35s 8d was expended by Fr Ralph Toneworth in mending a gospel;[56] in 1395/6 15s was spent for parchment for a processional, and 7s 7d for compiling a small book of collects;[57] in 1440/1 20d for mending a texta ferialis at the high altar;[58] in 1453/4 4s 10d for mending a martyrology with collects;[59] in 1462/3 2s for binding a lectionary;[60] in 1470/1 2s 6d to the goldsmith Simon Goldsmith for mending two lectionaries (presumably reflecting ornate bindings), along with pontifical rings and one 'owche';[61] in 1507/8 supplying parchment for repairing lectionaries and gospels;[62] in 1526/7 6s 8d for binding various books belonging to the high altar;[63] and in 1517/8 6s for binding lectionaries and gospels.[64] Necessary liturgical alterations were also covered. In 1484/5 the sacrist paid 14d 'for writing the mass of the Visitation of the Virgin Mary in the missal belonging to the high altar', and three years later 8d for 'writing the new history of the Transfiguration' in the same missal.[65]

Some of these 'lesser' liturgical books, or fragments of them, may have survived. In the late fifteenth century, and certainly before 1503, a folio from a fourteenth-century breviary was cut up and used as an endpaper for a copy of the Gospel of Nichodemus by Fr John Holond (fig 4);[66] a bifolium of a twelfth-century service book was converted into a wrapper for a set of sixteenth-century accounts of the prior (fig 5);[67] and a leaf of a psalter was used as an endleaf on a collection of material relating to appropriations of churches belonging to the abbey, compiled by Fr Thomas Jaye as treasurer, which office he held from 1514–28 (fig 6).[68]

The abbot maintained his own personal service books. In 1475/6, Abbot Estney, who had retained his role as sacrist, paid 2s 4d for 'a binding for the abbot's book of collects'.[69]

55. Westminster Abbey MS 38. This copy is not recorded at the abbey before the 17th century, and was only placed into the care of the librarian in 1764 (WAM 51191). The secundo folio reference given in the 1540 inventory demonstrates that the copy at the abbey then was not the same. For this manuscript, see Binski 1995, 194–5, and 1997.
56. WAM 19650.
57. WAM 19655.
58. WAM 19683.
59. WAM 19704.
60. WAM 19711.
61. WAM 19717.
62. WAM 19763.
63. WAM 19796.
64. WAM 19776.
65. WAM 19730 and WAM 19735. For the development of these new feasts, see Pfaff 1970, 13–61.
66. Lambeth Palace Library, MS Arc.L.40.2/E.25. Holond (d 1503) was professed in 1468–9, and acted as shrine keeper 1482–8. See Pearce 1916, 162.
67. WAM 33328. The book contains receipts and payments mostly made by the prior's assistants and servants, originally by Prior William Walsh in the 1440s, and then reused by Prior William Mane in the first decade of the 16th century. It is not clear when the wrapper was added.
68. WAM Muniment Book 3. Only a single leaf of the psalter is now present, not, as recorded by Robinson and James 1909, 98, two leaves. For Jaye, see Pearce 1916, 178. Jaye was given a 13th-century copy of Distinctiones fratriis Mauricii (Bodleian, MS Bodley 46) by Fr Robert Humfrey before the latter's death on 13 Feb 1509, possibly while Jaye was still studying at Oxford, see Pearce 1916, 172; Emden 1974, 316.
69. WAM 19723. However, there was clearly no firm rule about which account such work should come from. On 8 Jul 1496, the abbot's treasurer recorded the payment of 2s 8d for binding the abbot's portiphory, WAM 33291.

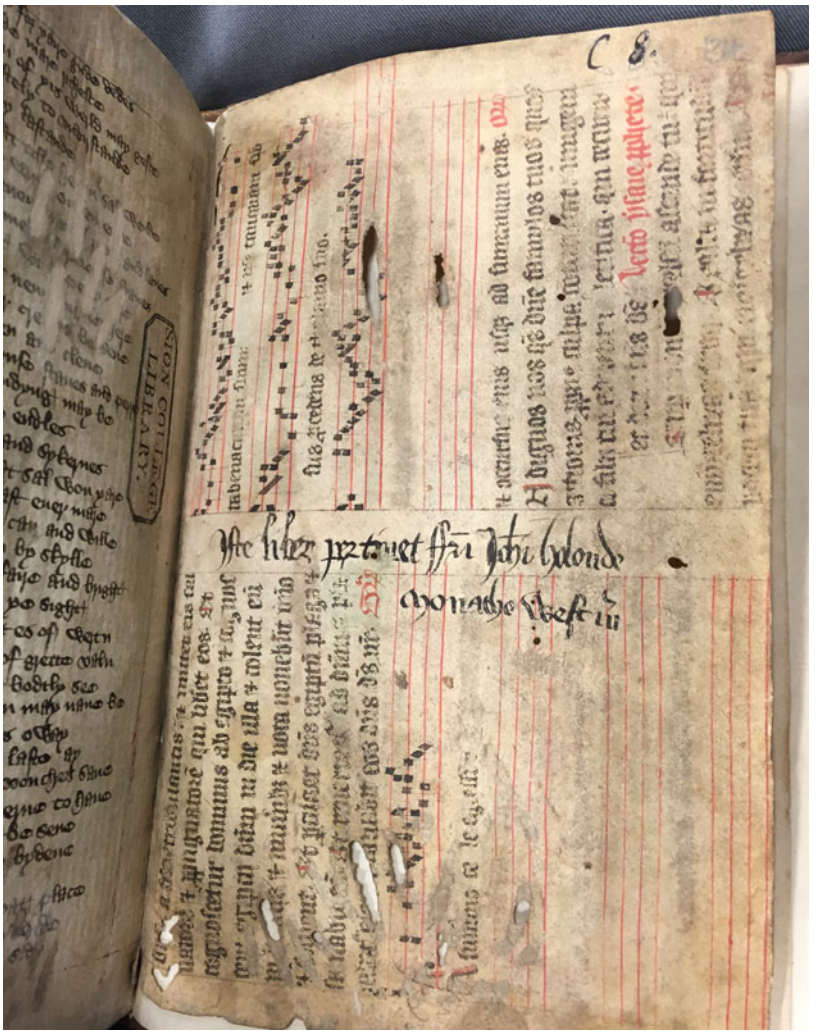

Fig 4. Fragment of the Gospel of Nichodemus. Image: courtesy Lambeth Palace Library, MS Arc.L.40.2/E.25.

In 1491/2 he paid 3s 4d for binding 'a new psalter for the lord abbot' (ie himself).[70] Estney evidently retained an interest in books beyond the liturgical to his last years, illustrating the increasingly frequent appearance of personal books among the monks. On 25 January 1497 he acquired a copy of Alexander of Aphrodisias' De Anima for 5s, along with Johannes Canonicus' Quaestiones super Physica Aristotelis for 4s.[71] On 1 October 1496 Estney had also

70. WAM 19741. Other surviving books might be associated with Abbot Estney. BL, Add MS 10106 is a compendium of religious and historical material, including a treatise on the 'manor and fourme of the coronacion of Kynges and Queenes of England' that may well have been his. In the 1520s Fr John Felix wrote a short life of Abbot Estney in a humanist script unusual for Westminster Abbey: BL, Cotton MS Claudius A.viii, fols 64v–65r.
71. WAM 33291, fol 19r. The prices would suggest that these were both printed versions of the works. An edition of Alexander of Aphrodisias had been published in Brescia by Bernadinus

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

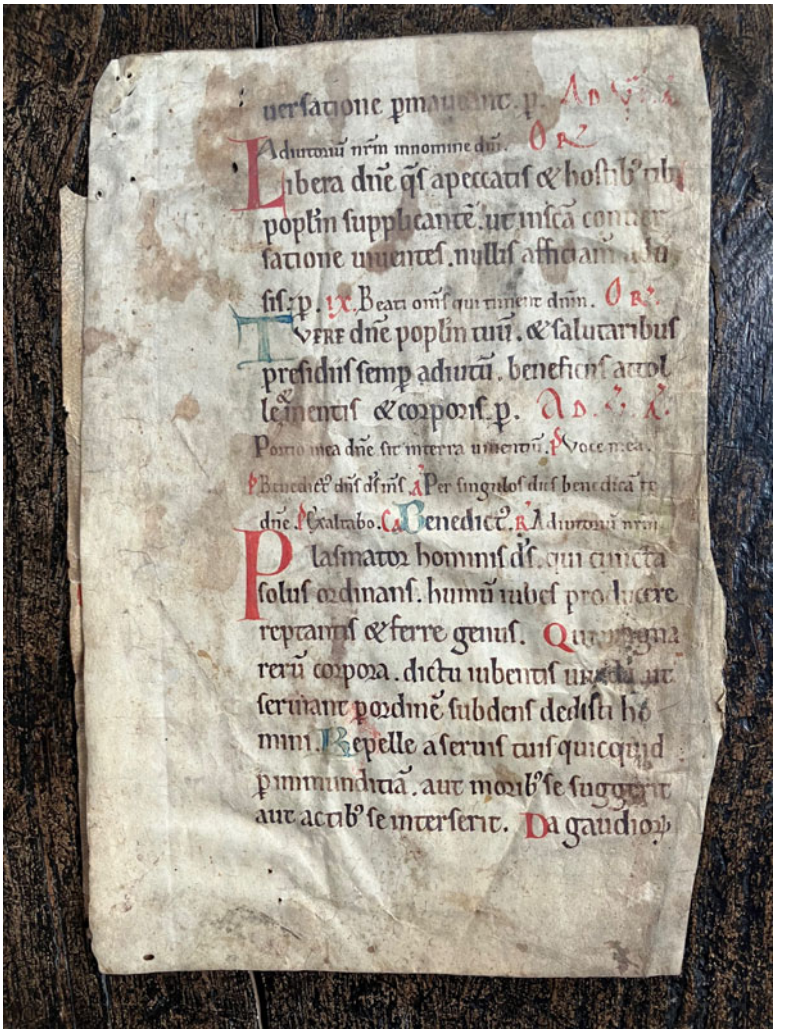

Fig 5. Fragment of a twelfth-century service book, used as a wrapper for WAM 33328. Image: reproduced by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

acquired 'uno libro vocato Johannes de Magistrum', for Richard Dudley, possibly a member of his household.[72] One of Estney's successors, Abbot John Islip, owned the prayerbook shown in fig 7 and a late fifteenth-century collection of prayers and de Misintis on 13 Sept 1495 (ISTC ia00386000); and a number of editions of Johannes Canonicus had been produced, including one by the St Alban's printer in 1481 (ISTC ij00264000).

72. WAM 33291, fol 13r. The book was presumably a copy of Johannes de Magistris, Quaestiones super tota philisophia naturali, which was published in a number of editions. Dudley may have been related to William Dudley, Bishop of Durham, who was buried in the chapel of St Nicholas at Westminster Abbey in 1483. In 1492 Dudley's former chaplain, John Veysy, by now settled in Oxford, bequeathed to Estney, along with a bible and a Liber Concordanciarum, a large four-volume edition of Nicholas de Lyra's Commentaries, so that the abbot might place it in a

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 6. Leaf of a psalter, recycled as endpaper, WAM Muniment Book 3. Image: reproduced by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

hymns,[73] drawn from a breviary, and largely related to the Virgin Mary and St Edward, possibly formed, in Pfaff's words, 'a private liturgical vade mecum'.[74]

The separate maintenance of books devoted to a specific area within the church was not unique. The warden of the Lady Chapel had responsibility for the books at the altar there.[75] In 1386–7 the infirmarer paid for the compilation of a new missal, including colours convenient place for the monks to study, and thereby be prompted to pray for the soul of William Dudley: TNA, PRO, PROB 11/9/138.

73. John Rylands Library, Manchester, MS Lat. 165; Bodleian, MS Rawlinson liturg. g.10.
74. See Pfaff 2009, 229n.
75. For this office, see Harvey 2002, 95–6. In 1393/4, for example, he paid 7s 10d for binding and extending a book of polyphonic music ('librum organicum'), which had been given by a previous

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 7. Prayerbook of Abbot John Islip, John Rylands Library, MS Lat. 165. Image: provided by The John Rylands Research Institute and Library, The University of Manchester.

warden, Fr Richard Wynwyk (WAM 23193); in 1491–2 he paid 9s 4d for binding, 'pesyng' (ie piecing or mending) and repairing four graduals, and for mending and 'pesyng' the missal at the altar (WAM 23263); in 1521–2, 6s 8d 'for binding four books', probably the graduals (WAM 23298); and in 1527–8 he paid 8s 6d for binding and mending the missal (WAM 23304). In 1483 the outgoing warden of the Lady Chapel, Fr Thomas Clifford, drew up an inventory of material in his possession to hand over to his successor, Fr John Stanes (WAM 9479). This included one massbook; a pricksong book; four grail books; three 'olde bookes', one of which was pricksong, the other two plainsong; and two quires of plainsong, one for the service of the Visitation and the other of the Oblation of the Virgin. Stanes himself owned at least two books, a copy of Thomas Aquinas, De Veritate (Trinity College, Cambridge, MS 0.8.30); and of David of Augsburg's Forma Religiosorum (Balliol College, Oxford, MS 264). This last was perhaps acquired to replace the copy formerly owned by John Breynt, but which at about this time was removed to Hereford. See Harvey 2002, 72.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 8. Fragment of an antiphonal in honour of St Edward the Confessor, WAM 33327A. Image: reproduced by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

and illumination by the limner Thomas Rolf (who had probably also worked on the Litlyngton Missal), and for binding.[76] None of the liturgical books itemised in the shrine keepers' inventories can be positively identified, and the lack of the office's accounts dramatically reduces our knowledge of them. The only fragment that might correspond is a single bifolium, removed from its original quire and used as a wrapper for a set of accounts of the kitchener, Fr John Campion for 1516–17 and his successor, Fr Robert Callowe (fig 8).[77] When the wrapper was added is not clear. Callowe continued as kitchener until

76. WAM 19370. He had also received a portable breviary from Abbot Litlyngton, which he paid 7s 6d to have covered. For Rolf, see Christianson 1990, 153–4.
77. The accounts are WAM 33327; the wrapper has been removed and is now WAM 33327A. For Campion and Callowe, see Pearce 1916, 179–80.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

1520, and served again in 1523–33. In the intervening years between his two periods in office, the role was filled first by William Overton (1520–1) and then Thomas Gardyner (1521–2). The accounts compiled by Overton,[78] inherited by Gardyner, were also covered in a wrapper of waste material at some point after 1521, almost certainly by Thomas Gardyner. The wrapper for this item included various stray items as well as a surviving copy of a work probably composed by Gardyner and printed by Pynson c 1512, The Gardyners Passetaunce.[79] Gardyner clearly engaged in rather amateur rebinding, and it is possible that he was also responsible for the rebinding of WAM 33327.[80]

The bifolium itself forms two folios from an antiphonal, bearing choral music specifically in honour of St Edward the Confessor.[81] This would fit the broad description of a book for St Edward's mass 'to syng on'. Although the fragment bears no feature that definitely places it in the Confessor's chapel, it is conceivable that it originated there. It was evidently a sumptuous manuscript, decorated in gold leaf, and apparently produced for choral performance in honour of St Edward. If so, it must have been dismembered after 1520, when all of the St Edward material in the shrine was still present. Why the manuscript was deemed surplus to requirements well before the Dissolution is not clear. Relatively little work appears to have been going on around the shrine in this period,[82] but the presence of fragments being reused as waste binding and wrappers in several instances at the abbey, apparently in the 1520s, may be more than coincidence.

Flores Historiarum

The most surprising volumes in the inventories are the two chronicles. The Flores Historiarum was one of the key historical productions of the thirteenth century. The text was first compiled by Matthew Paris at St Albans, and continued by other monks there down to 1259.[83] References in the text to Westminster Abbey suggest that Matthew Paris always intended the manuscript to go to Westminster, perhaps as an offering to the king's rebuilt church. This finally seems to have happened in 1265, four years before the rededication of the abbey.[84] Between 1259 and 1265 the text appears to have been compiled at Pershore Abbey, suggesting a delay between the death of Matthew Paris and its arrival at

78. WAM 33329.
79. See Payne and Boffey 2017.
80. There is little likelihood of the 'rebinding' having happened much later. There would have been no point in going to such lengths for an archival record of no further intrinsic value. Indeed, the fact that it was retained at all is remarkable. For such record keeping, see Harvey 2002, xlvii–liv.
81. Lefferts 2012, 72–3.
82. See Rodwell and Neal 2019, ii, 621. Is it possible that the old manuscript copies were being superseded by new, readily available printed versions?
83. See Carpenter 2012; Mortimer 2015, 292–3.
84. Other books entered the abbey at the same time, several under the auspices of Fr William Haseley. These included a collection of treatises, formularies and collections relating to letter writing and diplomatic precedents, including the monastic rules of Abbot Crokesley (1246–58), produced after 1246 (BL, Add MS 8167); and a miscellany of theological works, produced in the mid-13th century (St John's College, Oxford, MS 190). Both are inscribed with Haseley's name. The former was probably used by Haseley in the compilation of the abbey's customary in 1266, which he undertook on Abbot Ware's instructions (BL, Cotton MS Otho C.xi). Little more is known of Haseley, except that he served as subprior; see Pearce 1916, 56.

Fig 9. Flores Historiarum. Image: courtesy Chetham Library, MS 6712.

its intended home.[85] After it reached Westminster, monks there took up the chronicle and carried it on in various stages, and in various manuscript copies, resulting in a complicated textual history.

The resulting chronicle survives in numerous manuscripts, indicating its rapid dissemination and significance.[86] However the exemplar, on which the others were originally based, contains sections in the hand of Matthew Paris himself, along with several other monks of St Albans (fig 9).[87] This is presumably the manuscript that was at Westminster by c 1265.[88] As an offering from St Albans, it may have been viewed with particular reverence. After 1265, Westminster monks, including Robert de Reading, added continuations to the text up until early 1326.[89] Thereafter this particular manuscript contains only a couple more folios that continue the chronicle for a year until the accession of Edward III, at which point it breaks off. Further continuation of the chronicle was

85. For the role of Pershore, see Carpenter 2012.
86. See Collard 2008. By the mid-14th century, Norwich Cathedral owned a copy that was known as the 'Cronica Westmonaster', now Bodleian, MS Fairfax 20, see Sharpe et al 1996, 303.
87. Chetham Library, MS 6712. see Hollaender 1944.
88. Although the abbey's collections do currently contain a copy of this manuscript (Westminster Abbey MS 24) this is a later acquisition. See Robinson and James 1909, 82–3.
89. Robert de Reading died in 1317, but the manuscript includes a note at this change of hands for 1326 that this was the point that Robert de Reading concluded. The successive stages of composition are extremely complicated. See Pearce 1916, 91–2; Tout 1916, 450–1.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

compiled at Westminster in a separate manuscript, written by Fr John de Reading in the 1360s.[90] This latter extension survives now only in a mid-fifteenth-century copy, but in its original form John de Reading appears to have copied his text from the exemplar manuscript from 1299, with portions of another continuation from 1327 to 1345 added on. The section from 1346 to 1367 was compiled by John de Reading himself. John de Reading's suitability for the task may have been enhanced by his appointment as shrine keeper. He was certainly holding this position in 1363–4, when he also arranged for new iron chains for the feretory.[91] In his history, Reading is at pains to record the donation by Edward III in 1363 of vestments in which St Peter had celebrated mass, relics which he, as shrine keeper, would have taken charge.[92] In 1359, together with two other monks, he had helped to compile an inventory of the regalia of Edward the Confessor (themselves forms of relics), possibly in the same capacity.[93] That this inventory was drawn up on the day after the Feast of the Relics (16 July), and that it specifies that one of its aims was to record those things that had gone missing since before the Black Death ten years earlier, are surely telling. Absences from the relics would have been most notable at the feast when they were displayed (fig 10). And the shrine keeper, just as a century later, would have been concerned to demonstrate that these losses had not occurred during their office. At some point Reading also paid £20 for the construction of a screen or railing (clausura) at the altar of the Holy Trinity, on the eastern side of the shrine where the relics had come to be stored.[94] All of which demonstrates that he was deeply involved in the shrine and its accoutrements in the decade before his death in 1368/9.[95] No Westminster copy of the Flores continues beyond 1367, and attention among the monks evidently turned to other texts.[96]

Ownership inscriptions within the original manuscript of the Flores[97] demonstrate its presence at Westminster for a prolonged period. At the foot of the beginning and end of the calendar, a fourteenth-century hand has written 'iste liber e ecclie beati petri Westm'. The calendar has been heavily annotated with the dates of coronations and royal deaths, and, in one instance, the death of a Westminster abbot, as if it were important to have the details of those anniversaries easily accessible. While most of these dates were relatively recent, the death in 975 of King Edgar, a great benefactor of the abbey, and in whose reign Westminster was founded by St Dunstan, is also included. The latest date to appear is the coronation of Henry VI as king of France in 1431 (the last coronation or death of a monarch until 1461). On the final flyleaf, numerous notes and jottings have been added, at the foot of

90. BL, Cotton MS Cleopatra A.xvi, fols 69r–195v. Printed in Tait 1914. The manuscript is now bound with a 15th-century copy of the Dialogus de Scaccario (fols 1r–68v), but the manuscripts were only combined in the 17th century, see Tait 1914, 19–22.
91. WAM 19629. The sacrist paid 6s for them. These were probably the 'cheyne of yron þat tyme to fasten the same shrynes' in 1479, used to secure the relics at the time of the Feast of Relics; the various shrines and reliquaries were set upon 'iij long stoles'.
92. Tait 1914, 153. He also records the gift by the same king in 1352 of the head of St Benedict, ibid, 120.
93. WAM 51113, printed in Robinson 1909, 19. In many ways one might compare this inventory with those of 1467, 1479 and 1520. One of the other monks who compiled the list, Fr John de Bokenhull, was warden of the manors of Queen Eleanor from 1357–62, so he may actually have held the position of shrine keeper at this time, see Pearce 1916, 97.
94. WAM Muniment Book I, fol 92v.
95. WAM 19346.
96. See Mortimer 2015, 292–3.
97. Chetham Library, MS 6712.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 10. Polychronicon, Bodleian, MS Bodley 341. Image: courtesy Bodleian Libraries, University of Oxford.

which appears the name 'R Teddynton', the shrine keeper from 1467. It seems probable that this manuscript was the one Tedyngton recorded at the shrine, although it should be pointed out that, in addition to John de Reading's continuation, the abbey owned at least one other copy of the text.[98] By the second half of the fifteenth century, monks certainly also owned books in a private capacity.[99] In fact, Tedyngton himself had in his keeping

98. Now BL, Cotton MS Otho C.ii. This manuscript was badly burnt in the Cotton fire. It was compiled in the last quarter of the 14th century.
99. In 1468, John Halstede, abbot of Walden Abbey, sued William Grey, the bishop of Ely, for detinue in the Court of Common Pleas over a copy of a book called 'the Flour of Storyes', suggesting the occasional circulation of the text among religious at the time: TNA, PRO, CP40/826.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

more than one book, including a collection of medical texts,[100] which he inscribed 'Ecclesie Petri Westm. R Tedyngton monachi', and a fifteenth-century copy of Ovid's Metamorphoses.[101] All of which suggests in him a wide range of interests. But the primacy afforded to Flores Historiarum as the original text,[102] including as it does the hand of Matthew Paris himself, would have recommended it as the copy to be kept at the most sacred part of the abbey. Although its presence there by 1467 does not prove a continuous location for the previous two centuries, it is tempting to imagine that the gift of such a manuscript from St Albans (even if via Pershore) in time for the reconstruction of the shrine and rededication of the abbey in 1269, might indicate an original intention for the manuscript to be kept in the Confessor's chapel. If so, John de Reading's position as shrine keeper in the 1360s would have provided him with ready access to the text.

The absence from the list of 1520 of the abbey's Flores may be explained in part by another ownership inscription just above Tedyngton's. Here has been written 'Duompnus T Gardener anno dm 1503 et anno rr henrici 7 18° in vigilia J baptist'. Fr Thomas Gardyner was at the time a junior monk in the monastery, but he had royal connections and was a budding writer of Tudor propaganda.[103] He had entered Westminster in 1493–4, and in 1503 was apparently in the service of the prior, William Mane.[104] What prompted him to write his name in of one of the books at the shrine on 24 June (the Feast of St John the Baptist, one of the quarter days) is not clear. The king and Abbot Islip's great project to rebuild the Lady Chapel had got underway at the beginning of the year, interrupted almost immediately by the death of the queen, Elizabeth of York. Her burial in the abbey on 23 February was a vast, solemn occasion, at which the whole house was present. The following month the abbey was formally granted the house of St Martin Le Grand as part of the arrangement to fund the works.[105] Perhaps Gardyner's writing career, that was to produce at least two works for which the Flores Historiarum might prove useful (the Flowers of England and the Gardyner's Passetaunce), began at an early stage.[106] Gardyner himself was clearly in high esteem. Within two years he was to take a leading role in the arrangements for the temporary chantry of the king's mother, Lady Margaret Beaufort.[107] He is not listed as shrine keeper in 1503, that office being then held by Fr Richard Caxton. Caxton died sometime in the year 1503–4, and was replaced by Fr Martin James in mid-year.[108] At about the same time it evidently became apparent that the duties of the shrine keeper were increasing, and from the following year two keepers are recorded accounting for the offerings.[109] Unfortunately, from this point, they are not named, but the specific recording

100. Trinity College, Cambridge, MS O.7.37.
101. Balliol College, Oxford, MS 142, missing since the 17th century. For this latter manuscript, see Mynors 1963, 121.
102. Chetham Library, MS 6712.
103. For Gardyner, see Payne and Boffey 2017.
104. WAM 33288, miscellaneous account book of Prior Mane.
105. WAM 13193.
106. In 1516 Gardyner produced a short pedigree, perhaps in preparation for his longer works, of the lineage of Henry VII (and by extension, his own): BL, Cotton MS Julius F.ix, fol 24r. It was at this date, on the dedication of the Lady Chapel, that he was appointed one of its chantry priests.
107. Payne 2020. Gardyner's 'reward' for his service was an early appointment by the Crown as prior of Blythe, on 20 May 1507: see Emden 1958, II, 743; Smith 2008, 165.
108. WAM 19759.
109. WAM 19760. This presumably reflected increased activity at the altars at the shrine while the Lady Chapel was a building site. In this period, Lady Margaret Beaufort switched her chantry to the other Marian altar, that of Our Lady of the Pew, see Payne 2020. But she had also provided of the major feast day by Gardyner in his inscription suggests a formal appointment to office, possibly as chantry priest or second shrine keeper in the Confessor's chapel. Fr Martin James was probably frail, as he died in late 1504. It is quite plausible that Gardyner's inscription coincides with him taking on responsibility at the shrine that involved him in keeping the books, books which he would find useful in his own historical compositions.[110]

Polychronicon

The other historical text listed in the fifteenth-century inventories was the Polychronicon. The Polychronicon, first composed by Ranulph Higden, a monk of St Werburgh in Chester, survives in more than 100 manuscripts, and was, together with the Brut, the most popular version of English history in circulation.[111] No surviving manuscript can definitely be associated with Westminster Abbey, but it is clear that the abbey owned multiple copies. In 1375–6, the treasurers, Fr John de Lakyngheath and Fr William Colchester, purchased for £4 a 'book called the Polychronicon'.[112] This large sum presumably reflects a deluxe manuscript. In 1396/7 Fr Richard Exeter bequeathed a copy of the Polychronicon 'cum libro Marci Pauli' to Westminster Abbey.[113] Several extant copies of the Polychronicon are found bound with manuscript versions of Francesco Pipino's work on Marco Polo,[114] but the first of these is a large manuscript compendium, with the Polychronicon almost an afterthought at the end, which possibly originated in Evesham;[115] the second contains only those two works, but with the Pipino first; and the last also contains multiple texts, and appears to have come from Norwich Priory. While the shrine keepers' inventories are clearly not full bibliographical lists, they contain no mention of any work bound with the Polychronicon, and it seems more likely that the copy kept there was a stand-alone text.

A fourteenth-century copy of the short recension[116] contains several additional notes and marginalia, including a description of Henry III's procession to Westminster Abbey with the Holy Blood in 1247 (fol 133r; fig 11), added from a later recension.[117] A note at the end of the text appears to direct the reader to what may be the final part of a paper for masses to be said in the Confessor's chapel since 1496. Although Henry VII stipulated masses to be held under the lantern, around the hearse of his queen, he also appointed additional chantry priests to sing mass at the shrine, see Condon 2003, 89.

110. As such, one suspects that Gardyner was likely to have been responsible for the book's removal from the Confessor's chapel before the 1520 inventory.
111. See Taylor 1966; Freeman 2013.
112. WAM 19867. See Hector and Harvey 1982, xxxii. In the same year, they paid £4 to send a missal to Cardinal Langham (former abbot of Westminster, then at Avignon) by order of the prior, Richard de Merston. Langham bequeathed an extensive collection of books to the abbey, although they did not include a missal; see Sharpe et al 1996, 613–26. Merston himself travelled to Avignon on Langham's death in 1376, and brought back the books and other effects left to the abbey. It did include some other chronicle material.
113. WAM 6603. See Sharpe et al 1996, 627–9.
114. Including Cambridge University Library, MS Dd.I.17 and MS Dd.VIII.7; BL, Royal MS 14 C.xiii. Later copies also include Bodleian, MS Digby 196. See Hector and Harvey 1982, xli–xlii. I am grateful to Dr James Freeman for discussing his work on these manuscripts with me.
115. For this manuscript's possible origins, see Hanna 2017.
116. Bodleian, MS Bodley 341. See Taylor 1966, 98n, 122n; Freeman 2013.
117. Noted in Luxford 2019, 214 n 42.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Fig 11. The Feast of the Relics, from the Litlyngton Missal, Westminster Abbey MS 37. Image: reproduced by kind permission of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

manuscript containing the Westminster Chronicle[118] along with other continuations to the Polychronicon assembled by Archbishop Parker in the sixteenth century: 'reliqua de isto Edwardo III vide infra in papero in fine libri'.[119] Since Polychronicon ends at 1327 (very close to the point that the abbey's Flores ends), this points the reader to the continuation of the history, which takes the chronicle on to 1394, and assumes that the reader had access to both texts. If so, it is possible that these two texts were both to be found at Westminster.

PAMPHLETS

The fifteenth-century inventories list two quires or pamphlets. The first contained collects and gospel texts 'for our lady girdyll', a major abbey relic kept at the shrine. As Luxford says, 'perhaps the pamphlet was used on the feast of the Assumption (15 August), when the

118. Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, MS 197A, fols 109r–213v. For this manuscript, see Robinson 1907.
119. For the Westminster Chronicle, see Hector and Harvey 1982.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Virgin Mary was supposed to have dropped her girdle into the hand of the apostle Thomas'.[120] No surviving manuscripts have been identified that fit the description. The second of the smaller pamphlets is described as being only 'of þe relyquys'. Luxford suggests quite understandably that this item might either have been associated with the Feast of Relics on 16 July, or have formed a 'comprehensive, self-contained relic list', but the description is vague, and it is equally plausible that it was a text concerning the history and significance of the relics in the shrine keeper's care.

Until 1916 a manuscript[121] held by the Society of Antiquaries formed part of a larger composite manuscript with a complicated history. Its contents were generally concerned with heraldry, and dated from the fourteenth to sixteenth centuries. According to an internal note, in the early eighteenth century it formed part of the joint library of Lord Keeper Sir Nathan Wright (1654–1721) and Master of the Rolls Sir Joseph Jekyll (1662–1738), but Nathan Wright's library of books and manuscripts at Caldecote was bequeathed by him to his son William Wright, with no mention of Joseph Jekyll.[122] Sir Joseph Jekyll acquired most of his manuscripts from his brother-in-law, John Somers (1651–1716).[123] Since the manuscript was presented to the Society of Antiquaries in 1796 by Joseph Jekyll FSA, Sir Joseph's great nephew, an origin in Baron Somers' library seems more likely.[124] In 1916 it was rebound in four parts. It is a fairly large volume, measuring 15" × 10". What is now SAL MS 136C comprises fourteenth-century material, combining notes on the family and descent of William Marshall (fols 1r–3v); a register of Roger de Mortuo for 1355; two documents concerning the sergeantry of Meath of 1353 (fols 4r–v); a transcript of the Black Book of the Exchequer (fols 5r–26v); and portions of a fourteenth-century cartulary (fols 37r–8v). At the foot of fol 36v is a fifteenth-century inscription, erased but visible under UV light, reading 'Liber ecclesie sancti Pauli London'. After this, there is a small separate quire, fols 39r–42v formed of two additional bifolia, with no apparent connection with the earlier parts of the volume. This quire has been folded back on itself to be stitched into the volume, so that fol 41r would originally have formed the first page, and fol 40v the last.

On the blank folio that originally formed the opening of the collection (fol 41r), another erased inscription can be made out under UV light (fig 12). This reads: 'Liber de feretro Sci Edwardi Regis & confessoris ex procuracione fratris Iohannis Breynt anno regni regis Ricardi secundo post conquestum xxiii. cuius anime propicietur deus Amen.' Fr John Breynt entered Westminster Abbey in 1373.[125] He served as both treasurer and kitchener in 1391–3. In 1393 he was appointed both treasurer of the manors of Queen Eleanor, and shrine keeper, replacing in both roles Fr John London.[126] He died in the winter of 1418. Although this manuscript is specifically stated to have been procured by Breynt for the shrine, it was not the only book he acquired for the abbey. Hereford Cathedral holds a fourteenth-century compendium of religious and moral texts.[127] It is inscribed on the back

120. Luxford 2019, 215.
121. SAL, MS 136C.
122. TNA, PRO, PROB 11/583/346.
123. For John Somers' library, see the catalogue, BL, Add MSS 40751–2.
124. SAL, Minutes, XXV, 544 (28 Jan 1796).
125. Pearce 1916, 114.
126. WAM 19653–9; Pearce 1916, 115. In the 15th century, London became a well-known recluse at Westminster, in which capacity Henry V sought his advice on the day of his father's death in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster and his own accession, see Payne 2022.
127. Hereford Cathedral Library, MS O.VI.7.

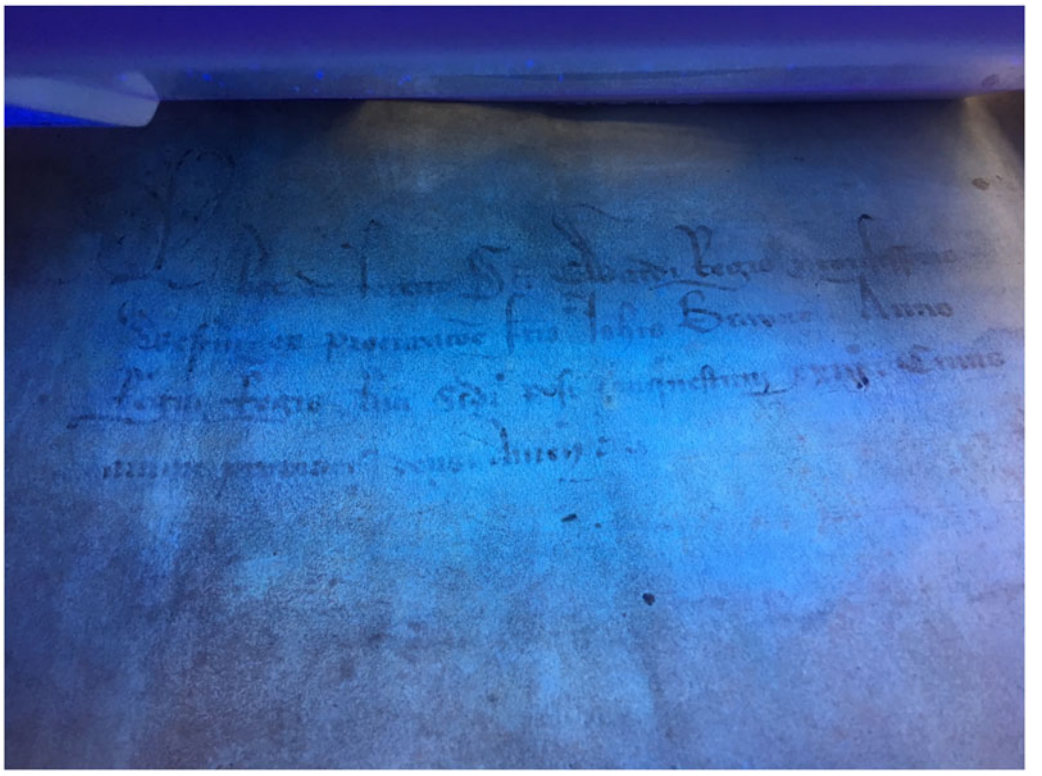

Fig 12. Endpaper of a pamphlet on relics under ultra violet light, SAL, MS 136C. Image: reproduced with the permission of the Society of Antiquaries of London.

cover 'Iohannes Breynt', with another inscription declaring that it was acquired by him 'et pertinent ad communia armaria [Westm']'.[128]

Where Breynt acquired SAL MS 136C in 1399 is not stated, but we may speculate as to why he did, and why he presented it to the shrine. The verso of the original opening folio, fol 41v, is blank. Fol 42, which on the current arrangement would have formed the next folio, contains 241 lines of a mid-fourteenth-century Anglo-Norman redaction of the popular thirteenth-century anonymous poem, the Ordene de chevalerie, a chivalric poem

128. For this manuscript, see Mynors and Thomson 1993, 41–2. It seems to have made its way to Hereford by the mid-15th century. The manuscript does not contain the reference system apparent in several other communal books (see Hereford Cathedral Library, MS O.4.VI, a 13th-century copy of Epistolae Apostoli Pauli glossate; a 13th-century fragment of Gratiani decretum, now Edinburgh University Library, MS Laing II.515; a 12th-century copy of St Augustine's De consensu evangelistarum, BL, MS Egerton 3775; a 12th-century St Jerome, De viris illustribus, BL, Royal MS 5 B.vii; or a 12th-century copy of the letters of Gilbert Foliot and other works, Bodleian, MS e Mus. 249). This system involved a leading letter ('M' or 'S' are the only ones that survive, perhaps reflecting the middle or left-hand cupboard), followed by a Roman numeral, with the form 'pe et ed West' [St Peter and St Edward Westminster] after. This might suggest that this system only came into place after Hereford Cathedral Library, MS O.VI.7 had left the abbey, a point at which the abbey appears to have built a new library (and devised a new reference system?); see Sharpe et al 1996, 611. For the earlier arrangement, see Robinson and James 1909, 3–4.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

following the capture of Prince Hue de Tabarie by Saladin before the Third Crusade, and the subsequent moralising on the form of knighthood.[129] The poem survives in at least ten manuscripts.[130] This fragment provides about one-half of the final poem. The poem was, in Keith Busby's words, 'one of the earliest vernacular texts to treat in detail the theory of knighthood', representing 'a growing awareness of the historical and literary need to explain the duties and functions of the knight in Christian terms'.[131] In it, the poet tried to 'assign knighthood to its proper place in Christian society'.[132]

The next reordered folios (fols 39r–40r), which would have sat after an unknown number of bifolia stitched in between, contain a brief treatise on the making of knights of the Order of the Bath, 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing'. This treatise was evidently popular, and a large number of copies of it survive,[133] but no other copy is known from before the fifteenth century (the earliest being perhaps BL, Add MS 34801, of the early fifteenth century). The provenance of the Society of Antiquaries' manuscript suggests the ceremonial of creating a knight in this way began somewhat earlier than the reign of Henry IV that has traditionally been ascribed to it. The process of knighthood, and the role of bathing as part of the ceremony, appears to have been longstanding.[134] Westminster Abbey played a leading role in the ceremony. In 1306, for example, Edward I, in preparation for his last campaign in Scotland, summoned nobles to come to Westminster to obtain knighthood. According to the Flores Historiarum, some 300 obeyed the summons, and thronged first to the Palace of Westminster, and then to the abbey for the Feast of Pentecost.[135] Foremost among them was the king's son, Edward, who was duly knighted. He then in turn knighted his followers, but such was the pressure from the crowd before the high altar, that two prospective knights died and many more fainted. The prince had therefore to conduct the investiture at the high altar. From the late fourteenth century, the creation of knights was closely bound with the coronation service, itself inextricably linked with the high altar and shrine at Westminster. All of which suggests a particular relevance in this text for Breynt and the abbey.

129. For this poem, and its manuscripts, see Busby 1983, 76, and 1984, 34; Ker 1969.
130. BL, Harley MS 4333 fols 87r–90v contain a version compiled by Fr William Herebert of Hereford (d 1333) and Harley MS 4333 fols 115r–117v a portion of a late 13th-century French version; BL, Add MS 34114, a copy owned by Henry Despenser, bishop of Norwich at the end of the 14th century; Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, MS 424/448; Cambridge University Library, MS Gg.6.28, an early 15th-century copy collected with a number of other poems of a similar nature; Harvard University Library, Cambridge, MS Typ 130H.
131. Busby 1983, 88.
132. Ibid, 87.
133. They include BL, Add MS 34801, fols 30r–35v, within a collection of chivalric and heraldic treatises and verse compiled of the early 15th century, possibly made for John Mowbray, Earl Marshal in 1405 and Duke of Norfolk from 1424; BL, Lansdowne MS 285, fols 7v–9v, a late 15th-century copy made for John Paston, together with material on coronation and chivalry (compiled and written for Paston by the scribe William Ebesham, who was based in Westminster, and undertook work for the abbot, see Doyle 1957); Bodleian, MS Ashmole 764, fols 90r-97v, of the third quarter of the 15th century; a late 15th-century copy, Bodleian Library, Oxford, MS Douce 271, fols 135-47v; BL, Cotton MS Domitian A.xviii, fols 243r-247r, late 15th century; College of Arms, London, MS l.5, fols 28r-30v, 16th century. English versions also survive, for example BL, Cotton MS Nero C.ix, fols 169v-170v. It was printed by Anstis as Observations Introductory to an Historical Essay Upon the Knighthood of the Bath in 1725, 106. See Way 1848.
134. See Perkins 1920, 21
135. Luard 1890, iii, 131–2.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

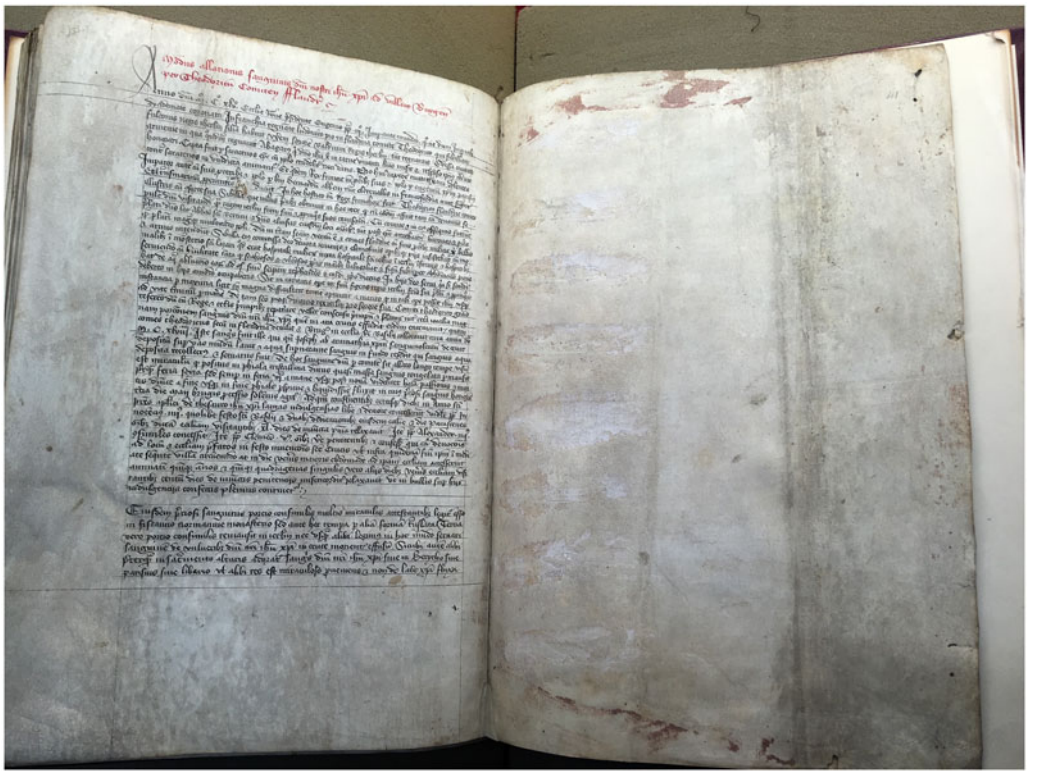

Fig 13. Fragment of a pamphlet on relics, SAL, MS 136C. Image: reproduced with the permission of the Society of Antiquaries of London.

The final page of the quire, fol 40v, contains a description of how the relic of the Holy Blood came to be taken by Thierry of Alsace from the Patriarch of Jerusalem in the Holy Land to Bruges in 1148, and of indulgences granted in relation to this (fig 13). The Holy Blood relic at Bruges was one of the most celebrated examples of its kind, the church that housed it becoming a major focus of pilgrimage,[136] but more importantly for Westminster, its origins in twelfth-century Jerusalem meant that it was 'the only other relic in Europe that lent support to Westminster's claim that the patriarchs of Jerusalem had been in possession of a portion of the Holy Blood prior to 1247'.[137] Writing also in the 1390s, Westminster's most brilliant scholar, Fr William Sudbury, devoted particular attention to the Bruges relic in a treatise on the Holy Blood relic, Tractatus de sanguine christi precioso, dedicated to Richard II.[138] Sudbury cites a number of authorities for his description of the Bruges relic, and Vincent is doubtless correct that Sudbury probably corresponded with keepers of the chapel of St Basil in Bruges. This manuscript suggests his information may also have come from other textual sources. The precise date of Sudbury's work is not known, but it

136. See Vincent 2001, 134–6.
137. Ibid, 131.
138. The text survives in one late 15th-century copy, Longleat House, MS 38, fols 256v–308v. For this treatise, see Vincent 2001, 123–36.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

must have been after his return to Westminster from Oxford in 1387.[139] In the surviving manuscript, Sudbury's treatise on the authenticity of the Holy Blood relic is preceded by another treatise on the abbey's rights of sanctuary, Objectiones et argumenta contra et pro privilegiis sanctuarii Westmonasterii, which was almost certainly also written by Sudbury.[140] This formed part of a period of active work to promote and reinforce the abbey's interests. Huge sums were spent on the acquisition of royal charters confirming the abbey's privileges and liberties.[141] At about the same time, a parchment placard was drawn up, doubtless for display at some prominent spot within the abbey, with extracts from early royal charters touching on the rights to sanctuary.[142] Whether Sudbury's work on the relics inspired the procurement of texts on relevant subjects, or whether the texts themselves formed source material for Sudbury, must be open to question.[143]

We do not know what other treatises the quire included, but it seems plausible that they would also have related to either relics or chivalric practices, with a special relevance to Westminster, and specifically to the high altar and shrine. This suggests that the manuscript itself was assembled with Westminster in mind, if not indeed on commission from Breynt (perhaps with advice from Sudbury). While this may not be the quire referred to in the later fifteenth-century inventories as 'of þe relyquys', the surviving fragmentary contents and the original location of the manuscript make this a possibility.

THE GATHERING OF MANUSCRIPTS

By the mid-fifteenth century the shrine keeper of Westminster Abbey had assembled a small assortment of texts to complement the collection of relics and other paraphernalia stored at the shrine. These texts were gathered to assist the functioning of the chapel, and to enhance the understanding of the sacred space and its contents. The liturgical manuscripts required for divine office were supplemented by several works fulfilling a

139. Pearce 1916, 113; Emden 1958, III, 1813; Hector and Harvey 1982, xxxvi–xxxviii.

140. This section of the manuscript is in the hand of William Ebesham, see note 133 above; Longleat House, MS 38, fols 9r–256v. Sudbury also composed a treatise on the coronation regalia, which was included by his fellow monk Richard de Cirencester in his Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Anglie (Cambridge University Library, MS Ff.1.28). Sudbury's other literary works included a major index to the works of St Thomas Aquinas, BL, Royal MS 9 F.iv; and a concordance of Jacobus de Voragine, Bibliothèque Municipal, Bordeaux, MS 286. On 4 May 1399 Sudbury received a papal indult to possess for life any books, jewels or money provided that they be preserved for the monastery after his death, Calendar of Papal Registers, v, 197.

141. The main royal charter is WAM 6234, issued on 18 Dec 1393; see Calendar of Charter Rolls, v, 340–2. Although not finished with the initial, it does bear a great seal encased in costly seal bag. The abbey's payments to obtain the royal charter are set out in the treasurer's account roll, WAM 19879. Many of the royal clerks involved are named, as well as their roles in amending the bills, transcribing evidence in the cause (charters from the time of Henry III etc), for letters of privy seal and copies (for one of which, see WAM 1585), for the great seal (£8 10s 8d) and its wax (20d), to John Scarle, the Clerk of the Parliament, for writing the new charter, to John Burton, Master of the Rolls, for enrolling the results, and over £145 in 'divers other gifts'. In total the abbey spent about £170 securing the charter. The following week, the abbey gave the king and queen two gold cups worth £58 as a Christmas gift.

142. BL, Add Ch 15895.

143. In support of the authenticity of Westminster's Holy Blood relic, Sudbury also used an entry in the Polychronicon, a copy of which, as we have seen, was also available at the shrine, see Vincent 2001, 133.

different function. The instigation for this possibly lay in the arrival from St Albans of the formative text of the Flores Historiarum in time for the abbey's rededication in 1269. As such, it may have acted as a form of 'offering' to the abbey, and to the Confessor himself. In the following years the chronicle was maintained at Westminster, and its calendar continued to be annotated with important royal anniversaries until the mid-fifteenth century.

In due course, other texts joined it. A more up to date chronicle, a copy of the Polychronicon, was probably added towards the end of the fourteenth century. A composite manuscript of treatises on relics and chivalry was acquired by the shrine keeper in 1399. Each of these works would have assisted the shrine keeper in understanding the context of his charges, and the events and ceremonial associated with the space. The books were also used by other monks. In the 1390s Fr William Sudbury may have used the treatises on relics as source material for his own work. When Fr John Flete came to compile his history of the abbey in the 1440s, he consulted and cited both the Flores and the Polychronicon.[144] His work combines historical material relating to Westminster with a protracted relic list, echoing the material held by the shrine keeper. Although not a shrine keeper himself, he did serve as one of the wardens of Queen Eleanor's manors from 1443–56; his counterpart in office acted as the shrine keeper. Flete's slightly later copyist, Fr Richard Sporley, also consulted the Flores manuscript,[145] but none of the resulting texts are known to have been kept, like their source material, at the shrine itself, despite their focus on relics and the role of the shrine. Nor did other chronicle material, like that actively compiled at the abbey firstly by John de Reading, himself a shrine keeper, in the 1360s, and then possibly by Fr Richard Exeter up to 1394, find a place at the shrine (unless the latter was seen as simply a continuation, and therefore classified under the same heading, as the note in Bodleian, MS Bodley 341 suggests).[146] All of which suggests that the shrine and the Confessor's chapel acted as a focal point not only for the religious activities of the abbey, but as its historical centre for texts acquired from outside the abbey, authoritative sources for works produced in-house by the community that could in turn be kept and consulted elsewhere.

This centring of the shrine area as the source of historical authority may have been cemented in the late fourteenth century, a period of dramatic change and development in the abbey, inspired by renewed royal patronage. Regular visits to the abbey by Richard II, both for prayer (especially during critical moments) and to entertain distinguished visitors, greatly increased the visibility and responsibility of the shrine keeper. They were matched by lavish gifts made by the king.[147] In January 1386 Richard II led the visiting king of Armenia to the shrine to inspect the relics and regalia.[148] Physical changes in the chapel also acted to demarcate the space. The insertion of tombs on the south side of the chapel for Queen Philippa (completed by 1376), Edward III (apparently still in construction in 1386) and finally for Richard II and Anne of Bohemia themselves (1395–8), effectively sealed it off from the rest of the abbey, and confirmed the space as a royal mausoleum.[149] This must have necessitated other practical rearrangements of the relics and associated paraphernalia.

144. Robinson 1909, 100–1, 103, 108, 119, 146. A note in the shrine Flores and in Flete's history both wrongly give the date for the death of Abbot Herbert as 1140, ibid, 141.
145. See Payne and Rodwell 2018, 197–201.
146. For Exeter's possible role, see Hector and Harvey 1982, xl–xliii.
147. See Hector and Harvey 1982, lv, 200–2; Saul 1996. In May 1389 the king gave to the shrine a large set of vestments, frontals and other highly decorated textiles: CCR: 1341–1417, 311.
148. Hector and Harvey 1982, 154–6.
149. The literature on the tombs is of course extensive. In summary, see Duffy 2003.

The scholarly investigations of Sudbury, and the accompanying acquisition of texts, were also prompted by issues of security, and the rights and status of the abbey that enshrined them. The murder of the knight Robert Hauley in 1378, who had claimed sanctuary in the abbey, shocked both the monastery and the wider community. The legal ramifications of the incident were still being felt as late as 1432.[150] Hauley and his companion John Shakell had escaped from the Tower of London, where they had been sent by John of Gaunt. Having been pursued to Westminster, the two knights took refuge in the abbey, but Hauley was cut down in the choir during high mass, in front of the prior's stall. The threat to the abbey's rights that this outrage manifested prompted the 'writing of the privileges over the door of the church'.[151] Four years later rioting Londoners broke into the abbey and 'forcibly dragged away from that holy spot' and beheaded Richard Imworth, steward of the Marshalsea, 'who had fled to safety to the church of Westminster and was clinging to the columns of the shrine'.[152] The abbey must have felt violated, and its security under increased threat. The need to assert its long-held rights to a sympathetic monarch was self-evident.

CONCLUSION

The gathering of a range texts at the shrine was part of the process of affirming the abbey's status. They provided the historical evidence required to support the abbey's claims over its rights and the authenticity of its relics. At the same time, the very act of locating those texts in the most sacred part of the abbey gave the manuscripts themselves still further significance and authority. It was to them that the monks turned when compiling their own histories. Their association with the shrine turned the manuscripts into objects with their own sacred authority.

The texts also fulfilled an allied function, serving to support the shrine's role as a focal point to visitors and pilgrims. In the visits paid to the shrine by royal and noble dignitaries, they provided a recourse to which the shrine keeper could turn for authoritative answers. By the late fifteenth century, they also demonstrate that the shrine was not the singular preserve of the community and royalty. William Caxton's advice to his readers, and John Leland's description of his own visit, demonstrate that the Confessor's chapel was in theory accessible to a far wider proportion of the population. Pilgrims, of course, descended upon the abbey in great numbers, but in 1477 we are told 'there is a continual concourse to the said monastery for the hearing of divine offices, as the most convenient place or church, both of natives, and of strangers who come to the said realm ... wherefore the monks and ministers of the said monastery cannot continue divine worship without great labour'.[153] To all of them, when necessary, the shrine keepers could turn to his key texts to assert the

150. See WAM Muniment Book I, fols 88v–89r; Perroy 1951; Rogers 1962–3. The incident centred on the ransom claimed for the capture of the count of Denia at the Battle of Najera in 1367 by Hauley and Richard Chamberlain (whose rights Shakell inherited). The count left his son as hostage for the ransom, but then refused to pay.
151. WAM 19637. The unnamed scribe was paid 4s 6d.
152. Hector and Harvey 1982, 9.
153. From a papal indult issued in 1477, in response to a petition from Abbot Estney, Calendar of Papal Registers, XII, 581.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press abbey's rights, answer questions and point to the fundamental authority for the abbey's relics, texts imbued with greater significance by the manuscripts' very location in the sacred heart of the abbey.

ABBREVIATIONS AND BIBLIOGRAPHY

Abbreviations

BL	British Library, London
Bodleian	Bodleian Library, Oxford
CCR	Calendar of Close Rolls
CPR	Calendar of Patent Rolls
ISTC	Incunabula Short Title Catalogue
SAL	Society of Antiquaries of London
TNA, PRO	The National Archives, Public Record Office, Kew
WAM	Westminster Abbey Muniments, London

Primary sources

Bibliothèque Municipal, Bordeaux, MS 286 concordance of Jacobus de Voragine

BL, Add Ch 15895, notification of abbey privileges

BL, Add MS 8167, Abbot Crokesley, monastic rules, after 1246

BL, Add MS 10106, compendium of material associated with Abbot Estney

BL, Add MS 34114, Ordene de chevalerie copy owned by Biship Henry Despenser

BL, Add MS 34801, early copy of 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing'

BL, Add MSS 40751–2, catalogue of John Somers' library

BL, Add MS 59616, customary of the shrine of St Thomas Becket at Canterbury Cathedral, 1428

BL, MS Egerton 3775, St Augustine, De consensu evangelistarum copy, twelfth-century

BL, Cotton MS Cleopatra A.xvi, fols 69–195, chronicle by John de Reading, 1360s

BL, Cotton MS Claudius A.viii, Fr John Felix, a short life of Abbot Estney

BL, Cotton MS Domitian A.xviii, fols 243r–247r, 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing', late sixteenth century

BL, Cotton MS Julius F.ix, royal pedigree by Fr Thomas Gardyner, early sixteenth century

BL, Cotton MS Nero C.ix, fols 169v–170v, 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing', in English

BL, Cotton MS Otho C.ii, Flores Historiarum

BL, Cotton MS Otho D.ii, miscellanea relating to crusades and the Holy Land

BL, Harley MS 4333, versions of Ordene de chevalerie

BL, Harley MS 4431, Christine de Pizan's works

BL, Lansdowne MS 285, John Paston, chivalric manuscripts

BL, Royal MS 2 A.xxii, Westminster Psalter

BL, Royal MS 5 B.vii, St Jerome, De viris illustribus, twelfth-century

BL, Royal MS 9 F.iv, index to the works of St Thomas Aquinas

BL, Royal MS 19 A. xxii, Jean de Meun, Sept articles de la foy, 1440s

BL, Royal MS 14 C.xiii,. Polychronicon, with Marco Polo, De Conditionibus et consuetudinibus orientalium regionum

Bodleian, MS Ashmole 764, fols 90r–97v, 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing'

Bodleian, MS Douce 271, fols 135–47v, 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing'

Bodleian, MS e Mus. 249, copy of the letters of Gilbert Foliot and other works, 12th-century

Bodleian, MS Bodley 46, Distinctiones fratriis Mauricii

Bodleian, MS Bodley 264, Romance of Alexander, fourteenth-century

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press

Bodleian, MS Bodley 341, Polychronicon, to 1327
Bodleian, MS Bodley 456, Richard Rolle, Emendatio vitae, and Hugo Ripelinus, Compendium veritaties theologicae
Bodleian, MS Digby 196, Miscellanea multa, praesertim historica, fifteenth century
Bodleian, MS Fairfax 20, 'Cronica Westmonaster'
Bodleian, MS Rawl.C.425, Pontifical
Bodleian, MS Rawlinson liturg. g.10, collection of prayers and hymns
Calendar of Charter Rolls: 1257–1300, II, 411
Calendar of Charter Rolls: 1341–1417, V, 340–2
Calendar of Papal Registers, V, 197, papal indult for William Sudbury
Calendar of Papal Registers, XII, 581, petition from Abbot Estney
Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, MS 197A, chronicles
Cambridge, Gonville and Caius College, MS 424/448, Ordene de chevalerie
Cambridge, Pembroke College, MS 307, Gower, Confessio Amantis
Cambridge, Trinity College, MS O.7.37, medical texts
Cambridge, Trinity College, MS 0.8.30, Thomas Aquinas, De Veritate
Cambridge University Library, MS Dd.I.17, collection of historical works, fourteenth century
Cambridge University Library, MS Dd.VIII.7, Polychronicon, with Marco Polo, De Conditionibus et consuetudinibus orientalium regionum, fourteenth century
Cambridge University Library, MS Ff.1.28, Richard de Cirencester, Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Anglie
Cambridge University Library, MS Gg.6.28, copy of Ordene de chevalerie with other similar poems, early fifteenth-century
Canterbury Cathedral, MS Y.ax, Westminster Abbey vestry inventory, 1388
CCR 1341–1417
CCR 1385–9
CCR 1399–1402
Chetham Library, Manchester, MS 6712, Flores Historiarum, to 1327
College of Arms, London, MS l.5, fols 28r–30v, 'L'Ordonnance et maniere de creer et faire nouveaulx chevaliers du Baing', 16th century
CPR 1391–6
CPR 1396–9
Edinburgh University Library, MS Laing II.515, fragment of Gratiani decretum, thirteenth-century
Harvard University Library, Cambridge, MS Typ 130H, Ordene de chevalerie
Hereford Cathedral Library, MS O.VI.7, miscellanea
Hereford Cathedral Library, MS O.4.VI, Epistolae Apostoli Pauli glossate copy, 13th-century
ISTC, ia00386000
ISTC, ij00264000
ISTC, im00719200
John Rylands Library, Manchester, MS Lat. 165
Lambeth Palace Library, London, MS Arc.L.40.2/E.25, Gospel of Nicodemus
Longleat House, MS 38, fols 256v–308, William Sudbury, Tractatus de sanguine christi precioso
Oxford, Balliol College, MS 142, Ovid's Metamorphoses copy, fifteenth century
Oxford, Balliol College, MS 264, David of Augsburg, Forma Religiosorum
Oxford, St John's College, MS 190, miscellany of theological works, mid thirteenth-century
Pierpont Morgan Library, New York, MS M.126, Gower, Confessio Amantis
SAL, MS 136C, miscellany
SAL, Minutes, XXV, 544
Stanford University Library, Codex 0877, Prayerbook of Elizabeth of York
TNA, PRO, CP40/826, Court of Common Pleas, 1468
TNA, PRO, LR/2/111, fols 8–27, Dissolution inventory
TNA, PRO, PROB 11/9/138, Will of John Veysey, 1492
TNA, PRO, PROB 11/583/346,, Will of Nathan Wright, 1721
WAM 1585, confirmation from Richard II to Westminster Abbey of privileges, 1393
WAM 5456, notarial instrument for the removal of Abbot Norwich, 1467
WAM 6234, confirmation from Richard II to Westminster Abbey of privileges, 1393
WAM 6603, inventory of the goods of Richard Exeter, prior of Westminster, c 1397
WAM 9477, inventory of Fr Thomas Arundel, shrine keeper, 1467
WAM 9478, inventory of Fr Richard Tedyngton, shrine keeper, 1479
WAM 9479, inventory of Fr Thomas Clifford, warden of the Lady Chapel, 1483
WAM 9485, inventory of Fr William Grene, shrine keeper, 1520
WAM 13193, royal ordinance for Westminster Abbey to take possession of St Martin le Grand, 1503
WAM 19346, infirmarer's account, 1368–9
WAM 19618–19809, sacrists' rolls, 1317–1535
WAM 19867, treasurer's accounts
WAM 19879, treasurer's account roll
WAM 23193, account of the warden of the Lady Chapel, 1393–4

WAM 23263, account of the warden of the Lady Chapel, 1491–2
WAM 23298, account of the warden of the Lady Chapel, 1521–2
WAM 23304, account of the warden of the Lady Chapel, 1527–8
WAM 23533*, account of the warden of the new work, 1468–9
WAM 24265*, abbot's account, 1383–4
WAM 33291, abbot's account, 1496–7
WAM 33288, Memoranda of Prior Mane, 1501–3
WAM 33293 sub-sacrist account book, 1505–9
WAM 33327, kitchener's accounts, 1516–17
WAM 33328, kitchener's accounts, 1517–18
WAM 33329, kitchener's accounts, 1520–1
WAM 51113, inventory of regalia, 1359
WAM 51191, extract from the Liber Regalis, c 1762
WAM Muniment Book I (Liber Niger)
WAM Muniment Book 3, cartulary of documents concerning appropriation of churches, 1528–40
Westminster Abbey, MS 24, Flores Historiarum, fourteenth century
Westminster Abbey, MS 34/2, De Scismate, with fragments of an inventory
Westminster Abbey, MS 37, Litlyngton Missal
Westminster Abbey, MS 38, Liber Regalis
Westminster Abbey Library, MS 45, manuscript version of Henry Keepe's Monumenta Westmonasteriensia, c 1682
Westminster Abbey Library, CN.7.I.32, drawing of fifteenth-century screen in St Andrew's chapel, Westminster Abbey, c 1723

Secondary sources

Anstis, J 1725. Observations Introductory to an Historical Essay Upon the Knighthood of the Bath, James Woodman, London

Biggs, E 2016. 'The College and Canons of St Stephen's, Westminster, 1348–1548', PhD thesis, University of York

Binski, P 1995. Westminster Abbey and the Plantagenets: kingship and representation of power, 1200–1400, Yale University Press, New Haven and London

Binski, P 1997. 'The Liber Regalis: its date and European context', in D Gordon, L Monnas and C Elam (eds), The Regal Image of Richard II and the Wilton Diptych, 233–43, Harvey Miller, London

Binski, P and Guerry, E 2015. 'Seats, relics and the rationale of images in Westminster Abbey, Henry III to Edward II', in W Rodwell and T Tatton-Brown (eds), Westminster 1: the art architecture and archaeology of the royal abbey, 180–204, Brit Archaeol Ass Conference Trans 39 (1), British Archaeological Association, Leeds

Busby, K 1983. Le Roman des Eles and L'Ordene de Chevalerie: two old French didactic poems, John Benjamins Publishing Company, Amsterdam

Busby, K 1984. 'Three Anglo-Norman redactions of L'Ordene de Chevalerie', Medieval Stud, 46 (1), 31–77

Carpenter, D 2012. 'The Pershore Flores Historiarum: an unrecognised chronicle from the period of reform and rebellion in England, 1258–65', Eng Hist Rev, 127 (529), 1343–66

Christianson, C 1990. A Directory of London Stationers and Book Artisans, 1300–1500, Bibliographical Society of America, New York

Collard, J 2008. 'Flores Historiarum manuscripts: the illumination of a late thirteenth-century chronicle series', Zeitschrift fur Kunstgeschichte, 71, 441–66

Collinson, P, Ramsay, N and Sparks, M 1995. A History of Canterbury Cathedral, Oxford University Press, Oxford

Condon, M 2003. 'God Save the King! Piety, propaganda and the perpetual memorial', in T Tatton-Brown and R Mortimer (eds), Westminster Abbey: the Lady Chapel of Henry VII, 59–97, Boydell, Woodbridge

Cox, J 1886. 'Sacrist's roll of Lichfield Cathedral church, AD 1345', Collections for a History of Staffordshire, 6 (2), 199–221

Crotch, W 1928. The Prologues and Epilogues of William Caxton, Oxford University Press, London

Ditmas, E 1964. 'The cult of Arthurian relics', Folklore, 75 (1), 19–33

Doyle, A I 1957. 'The work of a late fifteenth century English scribe, William Ebesham', Bull of the John Rylands Lib, 39 (2), 298–325

Driver, M 2009. 'Women readers and Pierpont Morgan MS M. 126', in M Urban (ed), John Gower: manuscripts, readers, contexts, 71–107, Brepols, Turnhout, Belgium

Duffy, M 2003. Royal Tombs of Medieval England, Tempus, Stroud

Emden, A 1958. A Biographical Dictionary of the University of Oxford to AD 1500, 3 vols, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Emden, A 1974. A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford, AD 1501 to AD 1540, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Fowler, J 1898–1901. Extracts from the Account Rolls of the Abbey of Durham, Surtees Society, Durham

Freeman, J 2013. 'The manuscript dissemination and readership of the Polychronicon of Ranulph Higden, c 1330–c 1500', PhD thesis, University of Cambridge

Hanna, R 2017. 'Cambridge University Library, MS DD.1.17: some historical notes', Trans Cambridge Bib Soc, 16 (2), 141–60

Harvey, B 1977. Westminster Abbey and Its Estates in the Middle Ages, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Harvey, B 2002. The Obedientiaries of Westminster Abbey and their Financial Records, c 1275–1540, Boydell, Woodbridge

Hector, L and Harvey, B (eds) 1982. The Westminster Chronicle, 1381–1394, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Hiatt, A, 2004. The Making of Medieval Forgeries: false documents in fifteenth century England, British Library and University of Toronto Press, London

Hollaender, A 1944. 'The pictorial work in the Flores Historiarum of the so-called Matthew of Westminster (MS Chetham 6712)', Bull John Ryland Lib, 28, 361–81

Horn, J 1963. Fasti Ecclesie Angicanae, St Paul's, 1300–1531, Athlone Press, London

Keene, D, Burns, A and Saint, A 2004. St Paul's: the cathedral church of London, 604–2004, Yale University Press, New Haven and London

Ker, N, 1969. Medieval Manuscripts in British Libraries, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Lefferts, P 2012. Sources of Thirteenth-Century English Polyphony: catalogue with descriptions, Faculty Publications: School of Music, University of Nebraska, Lincoln

Legg, J W 1890. 'On an inventory of the vestry in Westminster Abbey in 1388', Archaeologia, 52, 195–286

Legg, J W 1891–6. Missale ad usum Ecclesie Westmonasteriensis, Henry Bradshaw Society, London

Leland, J 1582. A learned and true assertion of the original, life, actes, and death of the most noble, valiant, and renoumed Prince Arthure, King of great Brittaine … Newly translated into English by Richard Robinson, private, London

Loomis, R S 1953. 'Edward I, Arthurian enthusiast', Speculum, 28 (1), 114–27

Luard, H 1890. Flores Historiarum, 3 vols, HMSO, London

Luxford, J 2019. 'Recording and curating relics at Westminster Abbey in the late Middle Ages', J Medieval Hist, 45 (2), 204–30

Mortimer, R, 2015. 'History and chronicle at Westminster Abbey, 1250–1450', in W Rodwell and T Tatton-Brown (eds), Westminster 1: the art architecture and archaeology of the royal abbey, 291–300, Brit Archaeol Ass Conf Trans 39 (1), British Archaeological Association, Leeds

Mynors, R 1963. Catalogue of the Manuscripts of Balliol College Oxford, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Mynors, R and Thomson, R 1993. Catalogue of the Manuscripts of Hereford Cathedral Library, Boydell, Woodbridge

Nilson, B 1998. Cathedral Shrine of Medieval England, Boydell, Woodbridge

Nixon, H 1976. 'Caxton, his contemporaries and successors in the book trade from Westminster documents', Library, 5th ser, 31 (4), 305–26

Pascual, L 2011. 'Jacquetta of Luxembourg: Duchess of Bedford and Lady Rivers (c 1416–1472)', Ricardian, 21, 67–91

Payne, M 2016. 'Caxton the businessman: a new glimpse', Library, 7th ser, 17 (2), 103–11

Payne, M 2020. 'The first chantry chapel of Lady Margaret Beaufort at Westminster Abbey', in J Boffey (ed), Performance, Ceremony and Display in Late Medieval England, 273–83, Harlaxton Medieval Studies XXX, Shaun Tyas, Donington

Payne, M 2022. 'Westminster's anchorite identified', Westminster Abbey Rev, 12, 50–3

Payne, M and Boffey, J 2017. 'The Gardyner's Passetaunce, the Flowers of England , and Thomas Gardyner, monk of Westminster', Library, 7th ser, 18(2), 175–90

Payne, M and Foster, R 2020. 'The medieval sacristy of Westminster Abbey', Antiq J, 100, 240–73

Payne, M and Rodwell, W 2018. 'Edward the Confessor's shrine at Westminster Abbey: its date of construction reconsidered', Antiq J, 97, 187–204

Pearce, E 1916. The Monks of Westminster, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge

Perkins, J 1920. The Most Honourable Order of the Bath: a descriptive and historical account, The Faith Press, London

Perroy, E 1951. 'Gras Profits et Rançons pendant la Guerre de Cent And : L'affaire du Comte de Denia', in Mélanges d'histoire du Moyen Age : dédiés à la mémoire de Louis Halphen, 573–80, Presses universitaires de France, Paris

Pfaff, R 1970. New Liturgical Feats in Later Medieval England, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Pfaff, R 2009. The Liturgy in Medieval England, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge

Rastell, J 1530. The pastyme of people, private, London

Robinson, J 1907. 'An unrecognised Westminster chronicler, 1381–1394', Proc Brit Academy, 3, 1–32

Robinson, J A (ed), 1909. The History of Westminster Abbey by John Flete, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge

Robinson, J A and James, M 1909. The Manuscripts of Westminster Abbey, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge

Rodwell, W and Neal, D 2019. The Cosmatesque Mosaics of Westminster Abbey, Oxbow, Oxford

Rogers, A 1962–3. 'Hoton versus Shakell: a ransom case in the court of chivalry, 1390–5', Nottingham Medieval Stud, 6, 74–108 and 7, 53–78

Ross, C 1974. Edward IV, Methuen, London

Sandler, L 1986. Gothic Manuscripts, 1285–1385, Harvey Miller, London

Saul, N 1996. 'Richard II and Westminster Abbey', in J Blair and B Golding (eds), The Cloister and the World: essays in honour of Barbara Harvey, 196–218, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Sharpe, R, Carley, J, Thomson, R and Watson, A 1996. Corpus of British Medieval Library Catalogues: English Benedictine libraries, The British Library, London

Smith, D 2008. The Heads of Religious Houses: England and Wales, III: 1377–1540, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge

Stratford, J 2010. 'Clerks, forfeiture and books', in J Luxford and M Michaels (eds), Tributes to Nigel J Morgan: contexts of medieval art, objects and ideas, 163–71, Brepols, Turnhout

Stratford, J 2012. Richard II and the English Royal Treasure, Boydell, Woodbridge

Stubbs, W 1882. Chronicles of the Reign of Edward I and Edward II, HMSO, London

Sutton, A 1978. 'Thomas Cook and "his troubles": an investigation', Guildhall Stud in London Hist, 3, 85–108

Tait, J 1914. Chronica Johannis de Reading et Anonymi Cantuarensis, 1346–1367, Manchester University Press, Manchester

Taylor, J 1966. The Universal Chronicle of Ranulph Higden, Clarendon Press, Oxford

Thompson, E 1904. Customary of the Benedictine Monasteries of St Augustine, Canterbury and St Peter, Westminster, Henry Bradshaw Society, London

Tout, T 1916. 'The Westminster chronicle attributed to Robert of Reading', Eng Hist Rev, 31 (123), 450–64

Tudor-Craig, P 1998. 'The "Large Letters" of the Litlyngton Missal and Westminster Abbey in 1383–4', in M Brown and S McKendrick (eds), Illuminating the Book: makers and interpreters, 102–19, British Library and University of Toronto Press, London

Vincent, N 2001. The Holy Blood: King Henry III and the Westminster Blood Relic, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge

Wackett, J 2014. 'The Litlyngton Missal: its patron, iconography and messages', unpublished PhD thesis, University of Kent

Walcott, M 1873. 'The inventories of Westminster Abbey at the Dissolution', Trans London and Middlesex Archaeol Soc, 4 (3), 313–64

Way, A 1848. 'Illustrations of medieval manners, chivalry and costume, from original documents', Archaeol J, 5, 258–72

Westlake, H 1923. Westminster Abbey: the church, convent, cathedral and college of St Peter, Westminster, Philip Allan and Company, London

APPENDIX 1: SHRINE KEEPERS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY[154]

With details of their term as warden of Queen Eleanor's manors in brackets

c 1310	Thomas de la Dene
1338	William de Staunton
1338	John Payn	(1334–42)
1338	Richard de Abindo
1346–7	John Payne	(1334–42)
1361–4	John de Redyng
1379–80	Peter Combe	(1377–80)
1382–3	John Farnago	(1380–3)
1385–7	Robert Adelard	(1383–7)
1387	Richard Cirencester
1387–8	William Halle	(1387–8)
1388–90	John London	(1388–90)
1390–1	John Eynston	(1390–1)
1391–3	John London	(1391–3)
1393–1401	John Breynte	(1393–1401)
1407–8	Robert Harmondesworth	(1405–10)
1422–6	Walter Coggeshall	(1410–16, 1418–26)
1426–7	R Shiplake	(1426–7)
1427–31	W Surreys	(1427–31)
1431–3	William Walsh	(1431–3)
1433–6	John Venour	(1433–6)
1436–7	John Wilton	(1436–7)
1437–8	John Cambridge	(1438–9)
1440–1	Richard Breynt	(1439–43)
1444–5	John Wilton	(1441–6)
1446–50	Bartholomew Massham	(1446–50)
1450–7	John Estney	(1450–7)
1457–60	John Ramsey	(1457–62)
1462	Robert Essex	(1462–4)
1462–4	William Wycombe
1464–7	Richard Tedyngton	(1464–8)
1467	Thomas Arundel
1467	Richard Tedyngton	(1464–8, 1472–4, 1477–80)
1479	John Waterden
1481	Ralph Langley	(1480–1)
1482	John Holand	(1482–8)
1488	William Mane	(1488–93)
1492	Richard Newbery	(1493–9)
1498	Thomas Ely	(1499–1500)
1501	Richard Caxton	(1501–3)

(Continued)

154. The majority of references to the name of the shrine keeper are to be found in the accounts of the sacrist of Westminster Abbey (WAM 19618–19809). He is often – although not always – named under the section recording offerings from the shrine and elsewhere in the abbey.

(Continued)

1504	Martin James
1506	William Fenne[155]	(1504–6)
1507	William Westminster
1513	William Grene
1520	Henry Winchester
1528	John Langham

155. Fenne is mentioned as keeper of the shrine at this date in an account book of the sub-sacrist: WAM 33293.

https://doi.org/10.1017/S0003581524000180 Published online by Cambridge University Press