What is Archaeology?

An Essay on the Nature of Archaeological Research
Paul Courbin
Translated by Paul Bahn

Courbin puts forward a penetrating and eloquent critique of the New Archeology that began in the 1960s, contending that it has failed in its goals. Courbin emphatically argues that the primary task of archaeology is the establishment of facts—stratigraphies, time sequences, and identifications of tools, bones, potsherds, and so on—and that archaeology is a distinct discipline, separate from history and anthropology. What is Archaeology? was originally published in French in 1982.

Foragers and Farmers

Population Interaction and Agricultural Expansion in Prehistoric Europe
Susan Alling Gregg

Gregg presents a sophisticated model for the interactions of hunter-gatherer societies and agricultural communities in Neolithic Europe, supported with archaeological evidence from southwest Germany. Her work builds upon earlier studies of optimal diet and foraging strategy, extending the model to food-producing populations. The applicability of Gregg's generalized model for both wild and domestic resources reaches far beyond her case study of Early Neolithic Germany; it will interest both Old and New World archaeologists.

A challenging view...

DEBATING ARCHAEOLOGY

Lewis R. Binford

As the leading theoretician and principal spokesman of the "New Archaeology" for the past thirty years, all archaeologists will find Binford's Debating Archaeology an important addition to the literature. This book includes:

- Extensive discussions of empiricism and the assumptions of "post Processual" archaeology
- Discussions of science as a learning process in conflict with empiricism
- Examination of the current scholarly conflict over the nature of early hominids
- Discussions of current scholarly conflicts in archaeological theory
- Several old, established sites are reexamined and shown not to support their traditional interpretations.

A unique interdisciplinary approach...

THE FLOCKS OF THE WAMANI A Study of Llama Herders on the Punas of Ayacucho, Peru

Kent V. Flannery, Joyce Marcus, and Robert G. Reynolds

The authors use the archaeological record of 5,000 years of llama and llama herder behavior in the Peruvian Andes, ethnographies of contemporary Peruvian llama herders, zoological studies of contemporary camelid behavior in the Andes, and advanced techniques of computer simulation to arrive at a model which works well to explain much that has previously been confusing about both animal herd dynamics and the evolution of human societies. Four variant sociobiological models of the coevolution of human and animal behavior which are currently being advanced by evolutionary biologists and social theorists are tested and shown to be poor fits with the observed data. Various perils inherent in modeling long-term evolutionary behavior on the basis of short-term observation are demonstrated in a cautionary way.

PALEOETHNOBOTANY A Handbook of Procedures

Deborah M. Pearsall

"Deborah Pearsall has written an indispensable book. The recovery, identification, and analysis of plant macroremains, pollen, and phytoliths are detailed authoritatively. Its encyclopedic coverage provides an unprecedented basis for understanding human and plant interactions in the archaeological record. It is a book which will assume a prominent position on the shelf of all archaeologists. It will stand alone, set the tone for the future, and tower above any potential competitor for years to come."
