Journal of the Society for American Music

Journal of the Society for American Music (JSAM) is an international, peer-reviewed journal that explores all aspects of American music and music in the Americas. JSAM is dedicated to supporting scholarship that transcends disciplinary boundaries, cutting across historical musicology, music theory, ethnomusicology, cultural theory, and American studies. JSAM encourages international dialogue across disciplines. The journal features articles, reviews of books, recordings, and multimedia items, and explorations of special topics.

Contributors

Marianne Betz is a professor of musicology at the Hochschule für Musik und Theater “Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy” Leipzig. Her research explores transatlantic relations, focusing on American music of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, as well as on early music. Her publications include articles for the Handwoerterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie, Archiv fuer Musikwissenschaft, Die Musikforschung, Musical Quarterly, Zibaldone, Yearbook of the American Music Research Center (Boulder, CO), and the Oxford Handbook of Opera. She is editor of Chadwick’s string quartets and his opera The Padrone, and author of George Whitefield Chadwick: An American Composer Revealed (2015). She is currently preparing a history of American music in German.

Michael Broyles is a professor of musicology at the Florida State University and Distinguished Professor of Music and Professor of American History Emeritus at the Pennsylvania State University. He has published widely on Beethoven and many types of American music. His most recent book is, appropriately, Beethoven in America, which examines his music beyond the concert hall. Prof. Broyles is currently investigating the importance of the visual dimension in music through concepts derived from the “sensory turn” or “revolution” that has affected several humanities disciplines.

Gretchen Carlson is a Ph.D. candidate in critical and comparative studies in the McIntire Department of Music at the University of Virginia. Her dissertation analyzes the labor and career experiences of current jazz artists working in the film industry, offering a sociological examination of the intersections of the jazz and film art worlds. She has presented her work on jazz and film at national and international music conferences.

Beverley Diamond is an honorary research professor at Memorial University in St. John’s, Newfoundland, where she was the Canada Research Chair in Ethnomusicology and founding Director of the Research Centre for Music, Media and Place from 2002–15. She has worked with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit musicians in Canada, as well as with Sámi musicians in Scandinavia. Among her many publications are the co-edited anthology Aboriginal Music in Contemporary Canada: Echoes and Exchanges (McGill-Queens University Press, 2012) and Native American Music in Eastern North America (Oxford University Press, 2008).

Sarah Gerk is a visiting assistant professor of musicology at Oberlin College. She holds a Ph.D. in historical musicology from the University of Michigan. Her research often considers transnationalism and the intersections of concert music, popular music, and traditional music, primarily in the nineteenth-century United States. She is at work on a book that examines Irish influences on nineteenth-century U.S. popular music.

Dana Gorzelany-Mostak is an assistant professor of music at Georgia College. Her research interests include music and presidential politics, opera and popular culture, classical crossover, and music and representations of disability in the nineteenth century. She is the creator and co-editor of Trax on the Trail, an interactive website that documents the soundscapes of American presidential campaigns.

Sandra Jean Graham is an associate professor of ethnomusicology at Babson College (Wellesley, MA), where she is also faculty director of the Sorenson Center for the Arts. Her research focuses on black folk and religious music, early black theater, and musical theater.

Lynn Gumert is a composer who specializes in vocal music, both solo and choral. She is a singer with and artistic director of the Zorzal Music Ensemble, a vocal-instrumental group devoted to the performance of Sephardic, Latin American Baroque, and nueva canción music. She currently studies music therapy at Montclair State University.

Jesus Ramos-Kittrell's work in music and cultural theory explores how the language of mobilities has provided much of the theoretical grammar for an understanding of globalization, as explained in migration phenomena and transnational constructions of identity in music. He has served as joint faculty in ethnomusicology and Latin American studies at Tulane University and was a visiting scholar at the Lozano Long Institute of Latin American Studies at the University of Texas.

Mark Slobin is the Winslow-Kaplan Professor of Music at Wesleyan University and the author or editor of many books on Afghanistan and Central Asia, eastern European Jewish music, film music, and ethnomusicological theory. Two of his publications have received the ASCAP-Deems Taylor Award: Fiddler on the Move: Exploring the Klezmer World and Tenement Songs: Popular Music of the Jewish Immigrants. He has been President of the Society for Ethnomusicology and the Society for Asian Music.

Ann Morrison Spinney has worked with Passamaquoddy singers since 1993 and studied traditional Irish music in North America since her teens. Her publications include Passamaquoddy Ceremonial Songs: Aesthetics and Survival (University of Massachusetts Press, 2010). She received the Ph.D. in music from Harvard University and an MS in library science from Simmons College. Currently a reference librarian at University of Massachusetts Lowell, Spinney has taught music and sociology at several colleges in the Boston area.

Stephanie Vander Wel is an associate professor of historical musicology at the University at Buffalo (SUNY). Her research interests focus on vocality and the embodied performances of gender, class, and region in country music. Her research appears in the Musical Quarterly, Southern Spaces, and the revised Grove Dictionary of American Music. Her book, The Singing Voices of Hillbilly Maidens and Cowboys' Sweethearts: Country Music and the Gendering of Class, 1930s–1950s, is in press with the University of Illinois Press.

David VanderHamm is a Ph.D. candidate in musicology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. His research has been funded through the UNC graduate school and through a 2013 Berea College Appalachian Sound Archives Fellowship. He is currently writing a dissertation on the social construction of virtuosity, which focuses on discourses of value and displays of skill in the age of electronic media.
