Political Methodology

Gary King, professor of political science, Harvard University, was presented the 1997 Harold Gosnell Prize of Excellence at the recent Midwest Political Science Association meetings by the Organized Section on Political Methodology. Honoring the legacy of pioneering political methodologist Harold Gosnell, the award is presented for the best methodological work presented at a political science conference in the previous year. King is recognized for his outstanding work on the ecological inference problem conveyed in his paper, "A Solution to the Ecological Inference Problem," presented at the 1995 APSA meeting. The methodology and statistical procedures associated with this work have already been adopted across multiple disciplines and are a real breakthrough in inference from aggregate data to the individual level.
