Equally remarkable were Mr. Henry's educational accomplishments, which began inauspiciously with his withdrawal from school in the eighth grade because of family responsibilities. After years of public service and without ever returning to school to complete his interrupted education, he began his formal university training at the age of 37 and completed his professional schooling at the University of Chicago under the direction of Leonard White, who urged him to continue beyond the masters level to pursue a Ph.D. rather than return immediately to public service. As was always the case, the latter proved to be an irresistible lure.

Mr. Henry's philosophy of service was expressed in a typically self-effacing slogan engraved on a plaque that hung in his office for years:

There is no limit to what we will accomplish
if it does not matter who receives credit.

For many things, the credit was his.

Constantine Warvariw

Those who knew Dr. Constantine Warvariw will miss him greatly. He was a man of compassion, knowledge and physical stamina in pursuit of justice and erudition. On April 6, 1982, he died of alleged illness known as Lou Gehrig's disease. However, doctors at Johns Hopkins University Hospital revealed that the cause for his illness and sudden death was a combination of lead poisoning coupled with arsenic and mercury in the blood stream.

Dr. Warvariw, who was born in the Ukraine, earned a law degree from Heidelberg University. He came to this country in 1949 and persistent to his scholastic endeavors received his doctorate from Columbia University in international relations. For 20 years he worked as a foreign service officer. Between 1974-1978, Dr. Warvariw was the Deputy U.S. Representative to UNESCO in Paris. Since 1979 he was the Agency Director for Transportation and Communication, Bureau of International Organization Affairs, Department of State. For his work he received numerous citations and awards, among them the State Department's Meritorious Award for Honor and the State Department Superior Honor Award.

As an active member in local and national Ukrainian organizations, Dr. Warvariw's contribution to Ukrainian cultural growth is well documented in his poignant lectures, publications and community leadership.

Though Dr. Warvariw's death was sudden, he will be long remembered by the Ukrainian community and those that loved him most.

Paul Dolan

Professor Dolan at age 71 fell through the ice while skating alone during the afternoon of January 12, 1982, but his body was not found until some weeks thereafter. During the morning of that fateful day he had played several sets of tennis. These facts alone attest to an extraordinary life of vigor. His physical vigor, however, was more than matched by his intellectual vigor. A member of the political science faculty at the University of Delaware since 1940, in the judgment of his colleagues through the years, and in the minds of uncounted appreciative graduates, Paul Dolan was the embodiment of what a university professor should be.

His excellence as an undergraduate teacher was almost legendary. He was Socrates cum Samuel Johnson. He matched wits, he cajoled, he encouraged, he listened, he enjoyed ideas but disdained intellectual fuzziness. Students were strongly attracted to him. They sensed a source that was deep but treacherous. Much like any search for
