

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

LANE RYO HIRABAYASHI is Associate Professor of Asian American Studies and teaches in the School of Ethnic Studies at San Francisco State University. He is currently working on a book on the migration and associations of Rincón Zapotec in Mexico City.

JOHN WEEKS, Professor of Economics at the American University in Washington, D.C., has worked in Central America as a consultant to a number of multilateral agencies. He has recently published The Economies of Central America and The Limits to Capitalist Development: The Industrialization of Peru, 1950–1980.

MARK D. SZUCHMAN has written several articles on family and occupational studies in Argentina as well as Mobility and Integration in Urban Argentina: Córdoba in the Liberal Era. He recently completed a book on the relationships between social control and the family in nineteenth-century Argentina.

DANIEL C. LEVY, Associate Professor at the State University of New York at Albany, focuses his research on Mexican politics and the politics of higher education throughout Latin America. His most recent book is Higher Education and the State in Latin America: Private Challenges to Public Dominance.

CHRISTOPHER WARD, a graduate student at the University of Florida, has presented several papers throughout the state. His current projects include studying Portobelo commercial fairs in the seventeenth century and editing for publication the field diaries of Sylvanus G. Morley, the noted Mayanist.

RICHARD J. JUNKINS is pursuing graduate studies at the University of Florida. He presented a paper at the 1985 SECOLAS conference on the introduction of coffee in nineteenth-century Costa Rica. His current research focuses on the 1948 civil war in Costa Rica.

JAMES BAER is completing a Ph.D. in Latin American history at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, New Jersey. His dissertation topic is informal working-class organizations in Buenos Aires at the turn of the century.

CARLOS MARICHAL is Professor of History at the Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana in Mexico City. Since completing his Ph.D. at Harvard, he has published a book on Spanish political parties in the nineteenth century and has coedited Banca y poder en México, 1800–1925.

D. C. M. PLATT is Professor of the History of Latin America at Oxford. He wrote Latin America and British Trade, 1806–1914 and served as editor and contributor to Business Imperialism, 1840–1930: An Inquiry Based on British Experience in Latin America.

EUGENE W. RIDINGS is Associate Professor of History at Winona State University in Minnesota. He has published various articles on Latin American business elites and on dependency and development in historical perspective.

SUSAN TIANO directed the Office of Women in International Development at Michigan State University. She is now Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of New Mexico. She is currently studying female export-processing workers in northern Mexico.

AMBLER H. MOSS, JR., is Dean of the Graduate School of International Studies and Professor of International Studies at the University of Miami in Coral Gables, Florida. During 1977 he served on the U.S. negotiating team for the Panama Canal Treaties and subsequently as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations during the period when the U.S. Senate debated the treaties. He was appointed Ambassador to Panama by President Carter in 1978, was reappointed by President Reagan, and served in that post until August 1982.

STEPHEN WEBRE is Associate Professor of History at Louisiana Tech University at Ruston. He is the author of José Napoleón Duarte and the Christian Democratic Party in Salvadoran Politics, 1960–1972. His current research interest is colonial society in Central America, particularly in Guatemala.

LEON G. CAMPBELL, Professor of History at the University of California at Riverside, is currently a visiting scholar at the Center for Latin American Studies at Stanford University. He is the author of The Military and Society in Colonial Peru, 1750–1810 and coeditor of Research Guide to Andean History: Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador, and Peru. He has published numerous articles on colonial and modern Spanish America and is currently writing a book on Andean rebellions between 1750 and 1850.

STEPHEN G. BUNKER teaches sociology at the Johns Hopkins University. He is the author of Underdeveloping the Amazon: Extraction, Unequal Exchange, and the Failure of the Modern State as well as Peasants against the State: The Politics of Market Control in Bugisu, Uganda, 1900–1983.

RONALDO MUNCK is Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Ulster. The author of Politics and Dependency in the Third World: The Case of Latin America and The Difficult Dialogue: Marxism and Nationalism, he also coauthored Argentina: From Anarchism to Peronism: Workers, Unions, and Politics in Argentina, 1855–1985, to be published by Zed Books.

DAVID A. FREIDEL, Associate Professor of Anthropology at Southern Methodist University, specializes in Lowland Maya civilization. His research interests center on the origins of the Maya state and Maya epigraphy and iconography. He is currently surveying Yaxuna, Yucatán, under the auspices of the National Geographical Society.

FORREST D. COLBURN is Assistant Professor in the Department of Politics at Princeton University. The author of Post-Revolutionary Nicaragua: State, Class, and the Dilemmas of Agrarian Policy, he was formerly affiliated with Florida International University and the Instituto Centroamericano de Administración de Empresas (INCAE).

ENYLTON DE SA REGO is Assistant Professor of Portuguese in the Department of Modern and Classical Languages at the University of New Mexico.

JORGE SALAZAR-CARRILLO is Chairperson of the Department of Economics at Florida International University. Formerly a Senior Fellow at the Brookings Institution, he remains a staff associate. In Brazil he served as Research Director for ECIEL. The author of numerous books and articles and a founding member of IESCARIBE (Institutes of Economic and Social Research of the Caribbean Basin), he is currently conducting regional research sponsored by the Inter-American Development Bank.