What Older Americans Think

Interest Groups and Aging Policy

Christine L. Day

As the much publicized "graying of America" progresses, political groups that lobby for the elderly have achieved enormous power and organizational success. What Older Americans Think provides a fresh look at these groups. Are older people united in support of increasing old-age benefits? Do younger people tend to oppose old-age benefits? Why do aging-based political organizations attract so many members? Drawing on survey data and extensive interviews, Christine Day offers new answers to these and other frequently posed questions.

How Policies Change

The Japanese Government and the Aging Society

John Creighton Campbell

Japan is aging rapidly, and its government has been groping with the implications of this profound social change. In a pioneering study of postwar Japanese social policy, John Creighton Campbell traces the growth of an elaborate and expensive set of pension, health care, employment, and social service programs for older people. He argues that an understanding of policy change requires a careful disentangling of social problems and of the conflicts and coalitions among bureaucrats, politicians, interest groups, and the general public.
