Lies, Slander and Obscenity in Medieval English Narrative

Pastoral Rhetoric and the Deviant Speaker
Edwin David Craun

Drawing on manuscript sources, this book examines how the medieval clergy developed the authority and persuasive force to attempt to govern the day-to-day speech of Western Christians. It explores how Chaucer, Langland, Gower and the "Patience" poet presented and judged these attempts to label some political, social and private speech as deviant and destructive.

Productivity and Performance in the Paper Industry

Labour, Capital and Technology in Britain and America, 1860–1914

Gary Bryan Magee

In a significant new contribution to economic history, Magee examines an important British industry which, like many others, declined in relative importance during the period prior to 1914. The author compares Britain's performance in paper-making with its main international rivals of the time, America and Germany.

The Industrial Revolution in Scotland

Christopher A. Whatley

Whatley's approach is largely comparative, with the Scottish experience of industrialization being placed within the context of the debate about the "British" Industrial Revolution. The study encompasses the whole of Scotland and assesses the nature and impact of early industrialization in the towns of the Borders and in Dundee, as well as in the Highlands and Islands.

Empire and Information

Intelligence Gathering and Social Communication in India, 1780–1870
C.A. Bayly

Christopher Bayly writes a penetrating account of the evolution of British intelligence in India. He describes how Indian spies were recruited to secure political and social information about their subjects, and how the colonial authorities interpreted, and, in some cases, misinterpreted the information supplied.

Towns, Plans and Society in Modern Britain

Helen Meller

This concise survey aims to explore the interaction of the social and physical environment of cities. Meller shows that while all modern societies have been subject to the economic, social and technological forces that have produced mass urbanization, not all towns and cities are the same. The author addresses the question of how people in Britain have sought to improve the quality of life in cities.

Historiography and Ideology in Stuart Drama

Ivo Kamps

Kamps's study traces the development of Stuart drama in the radically different environment of the seventeenth century. A new consciousness of what history entailed, he claims, emerged during this period, materially affecting the structure of historical drama. Stuart drama used this new interest in historiography to undermine inherited forms of political and literary authority.

Leslie Stephen and the New Dictionary of National Biography

H.C.G. Matthew

In this 1995 lecture, Colin Matthew, editor of the New DNB, shows how the work of a great Victorian, Leslie Stephen, relates directly to a great scholarly undertaking by today's academic community. He charts a history of the original DNB, explaining how and when this example of remarkable publishing initiative came to be.

Trinity and Incarnation in Anglo-Saxon Art and Thought

Barbara C. Raw

This book is a study of the theology of the Trinity as expressed in the literature and art of the late Anglo-Saxon period. It examines the meaning of the representations of the Trinity in tenth- and eleventh-century English manuscripts and their relationship both to Anglo-Saxon theology and to earlier debates about the legitimacy of representations of the divine.

The Composition of Old English Poetry

H. Momma

This book offers an imaginative new way of understanding the relationship between syntax and meter in Old English verse. It challenges the view that Old English poetry is composed in loose syntax to compensate for the strict requirements of prosody, such as meter and alliteration.

Sir Arthur Newsholme and State Medicine 1885-1935

John M. Eyles

The half century between 1885 and 1935 witnessed a significant improvement in the health of the British people and an unprecedented expansion of preventive and therapeutic services offered by the state through its local authorities. This book examines this time of change through the ideas and experiences of one prominent participant, Sir Arthur Newsholme.

Hunting the Wren

TRANSFORMATION OF BIRD TO SYMBOL
Elizabeth Atwood Lawrence

A unique interdisciplinary study, this book examines the British and European tradition of the wren hunt, in which a bird ordinarily revered and protected for most of the year was killed around the time of the annual solstice. In focusing on this ancient ritual, Elizabeth Atwood Lawrence draws on her training in cultural anthropology and biology to cast a fresh light on the complexities of human-animal relationships.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW

First published in 1886, The English Historical Review is the oldest journal of historical scholarship in the English-speaking world. It deals not only with British history, but with almost all aspects of European and world history since the classical era: it covers the history of the Americas, including the foreign policy of the USA and her role in the wider world, but excludes the domestic history of the USA since Independence, for which other scholarly outlets are plentiful.
