CONTRIBUTORS

Christine Meisner Rosen is associate professor of business and public policy at the Walter A. Haas School of Business at the University of California, Berkeley. She received her Ph.D. in history from Harvard University. She is the author of The Limits of Power: Great Fires and the Process of City Growth in America (1986). Her current work focuses on the history of industrial pollution control in the U.S. She is exploring how business, the public, the courts, and state, local, interstate, and federal government agencies responded to industry's degradation of the environment between 1850 and 1970. In a less historical vein, she is also studying current developments and future prospects in environmental management and green manufacturing in the electronics industry.

Steven W. Tolliday is professor of economic and social history in the School of Business and Economic Studies and director of the Centre for Business History, University of Leeds. He is author of Business, Banking and Politics (1987) and editor (with Jonathan Zeitlin) of Shopfloor Bargaining and the State (1985), Automobile Industry and Its Workers (1986) and Power to Manage? (1991). He previously taught at the Harvard Business School and was editor of Business History Review from 1988–1992. His current work focusses on the history of the international auto industry.

Dr. Craig Young is currently senior lecturer in geography in the Department of Environmental and Geographical Sciences at the Manchester Metropolitan University. He gained his Ph.D. in 1990 from the University of Edinburgh in geography and economic and social history. The focus of the thesis was the historical geography of micro-scale businesses, the historical geography of law in Scotland, and aspects of the cultural geography of contemporary rural areas.
