EDITORIAL POLICY. The journal publishes material on all aspects of the scientific study of language behaviour in children and the principles which underlie it. Articles may report findings from naturalistic observations or experiments; and the subject-matter may include sounds, grammar, lexicon, semantics, pragmatics, sociolinguistics, bilingualism, or any other recognized facet of language study. Articles may be limited to the investigation of one language, or they may be comparative studies; they may be focused on individuals or present statistical studies of groups. Studies of reading, writing, and the use of sign language are included if they are related to general questions of language development, as are articles with a pathological bias. (Notes for contributors are given on the inside back cover.)
