

Lifetime Achievement Award by the Politics of Education Association (PEA). The award, which recognizes Wirt's scholarly contributions to the field of politics of education, will be presented this April as part of PEA's 25th anniversary celebration.

Dina A. Zinnes, professor of political science, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, was the recipient of the 1994 APSA Career Achievement Award, Conflict Processes Section.

In Memoriam

Hugh A. Bone

For the last half century, Hugh A. Bone guided students through the halls of learning not only at the University of Washington but also in the state capitol. After retiring from teaching in 1979 at the age of 70, he was invited back to direct interns and share his wisdom about Washington State politics with colleagues and students. He remained an active member of the university community until his recent death on February 5, 1994.

In 1956, Hugh Bone pioneered the Washington State Legislative Internship Program. Since then, the Olympia program has become a national model, and now includes participants from the state's other four-year colleges and universities. In keeping his lifelong commitment to teach students about the political process through firsthand experience in government, Professor Bone supervised many generations of UW interns working for state lawmakers during their annual session. Over the years, countless students have been motivated by Bone to take an active part in public affairs, and many have gone on to occupy public office.

When Bone "officially" retired from the political science faculty in 1979, both the State Senate and the House of Representatives passed resolutions recognizing his contribution to citizen education. Valued for his expertise and counsel, the legislators warmly addressed Bone as "friend, adviser, and teacher."

Bone's dedication to teaching responsible citizenship surfaced early in his career. In 1935, he completed his master's degree at the University of Wisconsin with a thesis entitled "Civic Education in Political Science." Then he took his Ph.D. at Northwestern University where he wrote his dissertation, "The Effects of College Teaching on Student Political Attitudes and Interests." He joined the University of Washington faculty in 1948 to teach American government and politics, including specialized courses in political parties, state legislatures, the U.S. Congress, and state government. He also served as chairman of the Department of Political Science for a decade, from 1959 to 1968, and was president of the Western Political Science Association.

As a scholar in American government, Bone published twelve books, including American Politics and the Party System, Politics and Voters, and Washington Politics, as well as numerous articles on state and national politics. As an advocate of political participation, Bone was appointed to serve on committees by the governor, the mayor of Seattle, the secretary of state, and the legislature, and worked as a consultant to diverse civic groups and organizations.

In the words of a former student, Bone's enduring contribution to the community is "his ability to inspire active, responsible citizenship in his students and associates."

To pay tribute to Professor Bone for his achievements in advancing public service, friends and former students established the Hugh A. Bone Scholarship in 1986. The fund provides awards to financially needy, well-qualified undergraduates for participation in a full-time legislative internship program sponsored by the Department of Political Science. Contributions can be sent to: The Hugh A. Bone Scholarship, c/o Alumni/Donor Information Systems, 4534 11th Ave., N.E., 2nd Floor, Seattle, WA 98105.

Dorothy I. Cline

Dorothy I. Cline, professor emerita at the University of New Mexico, died at her home in Albuquerque on December 4, 1993, at the age of 89. She was born in Michigan, worked for Harry Hopkins during the New Deal, and earned a bachelor's degree at the University of Michigan and a master's in political science at the University of Chicago. She remained, accordingly, active in both civic and academic affairs throughout her long life.

In 1936, she served as training director in the Recreation Division of the Works Progress Administration and later as a community analyst for the Office of Civil Defense. In New Mexico, along with her teaching and writing, she was chair of the Bernalillo County Commission, organizer and chair of the New Mexico Commission on the Status of Women, vice president of the New Mexico Constitutional Convention, and director of health and recreation in the State Department of Education, and in 1967 she was appointed by President Johnson to the National Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. At the university, Professor Cline was director of the Division of Government Research. After her retirement she received the New Mexico Distinguished Public Service Award.

In 1946 she became the first woman in the Department of Government, as it was then known, and helped change its name to Government and Citizenship. (Later, certainly without her encouragement, it became more austere the Department of Political Science.) Among her later publications were an essay on "Constitutional Politics in New Mexico: 1910-1976" in New Mexico Government (1976), New Mexico's 1910 Constitution (1985), and Reorganization of the Executive Branch of State Government (1978). She retired in 1970 and remained active to the end. She will be remembered as a person of extraordinary drive, courage, and candor.
