

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

ROBERT A. CARP is Professor of Political Science at the University of Houston. He is the co-author of Politics and Policy Making in the Federal District Courts (with C. K. Rowland) and The Federal Courts (with R. Stidham). His work on grand juries and trial courts has appeared in American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics, Social Science Quarterly, and other journals.

JACQUELINE COHEN is Associate Director of Research for the Urban Systems Institute at the School of Urban and Public Affairs, Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh. Her research concerns quantitative methods, criminal careers, and incapacitation.

JOHN M. CONLEY is Professor of Law at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He holds both J.D. and Ph.D. (Anthropology) degrees from Duke University. He has studied the strategic use of language at several levels of the American judicial system, and his current research focuses on the differences between lay and legal reasoning about the resolution of disputes. In addition, he has published several papers on the law of intellectual property and is the coauthor of Statistical Evidence in Litigation (1986).

JOHN HAGAN is Professor of Sociology and Law at the University of Toronto. He is a fellow of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and a Research Fellow of Statistics Canada. His research is on the legal profession, the courts, and causal theories of crime and delinquency. His most recent book is Structural Criminology, to be published in the fall by Polity Press of Cambridge.

MARIE HUXTER is a graduate and former Assistant Dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. She is collaborating with John Hagan in research on the legal profession and is studying in Paris.

FRANK MUNGER is Professor of Law at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

WILLIAM M. O'BARR holds joint appointments as Professor in the Departments of Anthropology and Sociology at Duke University. His primary research interests focus on language in institutional contexts, especially courts of law and advertising. In addition to his work in the United States on these topics, he has conducted ethnographic research among the Pare people of Tanzania and studied bilingual courts in Canada. His books include Language and Politics (1976), Linguistic Evidence: Lan- guage, Power and Strategy in the Courtroom (1982), and Language and Power (1984).

PATRICIA PARKER is Research Associate at the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto where she is involved in research on the legal profession and the causes of crime and delinquency.

C. K. ROWLAND is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Kansas and Guest Scholar at the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C. He is the co-author of Politics and Policy Making in the Federal District Courts (with R. A. Carp). His work on juries and trial judge behavior has appeared in the Journal of Politics and American Journal of Political Science. His work on intergovernmental regulation of environmental externalities has appeared in Policy Studies Review and elsewhere. He is currently working on the application of social judgment models to the dispute-resolution process.

DONALD SONGER is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of South Carolina. His studies of the U.S. Courts of Appeals have appeared in the Journal of Politics, the American Journal of Political Science, and other journals. His work on state legislatures has appeared in Social Science Quarterly and Western Political Quarterly. He is currently working on the development of a multi-user data base for the courts of appeals.

ROBERT J. SAMPSON is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. His major research interests are deterrence theory and the ecological study of crime and delinquency.

TOM R. TYLER is Professor of Psychology and Political Science at Northwestern University and a research fellow at the American Bar Foundation. His research is concerned with the psychology of justice and the legitimacy of legal authority. He is the co-author with Allan Lind of The Social Psychology of Procedural Justice (New York: Plenum, 1988).