Translating the Devil

Religion and Modernity among the Ewe in Ghana

Birgit Meyer

A study showing how the Peki Ewe have adapted and moulded the tenets of Christianity given to them by Protestant missionaries in the nineteenth century in order to be able to understand social change in large part due to Ghana's participation in the wider world. The author explores the way in which the Ewe positively reconcile their Christian and traditional beliefs as they strive to come to terms with the good and the evil in their experience.

Death in Abeyance

Therapies and Illness Among the Tabwa of Zaire/Congo

Christopher Davis

An ethnography of the Tabwa people of Zaire and their categories of illness, medicine, divination and healing. Rich in case material, the text offers an understanding of an African approach to body parts, illnesses, symptoms and personal features through to actual methods of diagnosis, prognosis and cure.

Songs of the Women Migrants

Performance and Identity in South Africa

Deborah James

This book gives an account of how migrant women, whose lives and experiences have heretofore been much neglected in the pages of academic scholarship, dance and sing the vibrant and expressive musical style of kiba. In so doing, they build an identity as autonomous breadwinners whose aspirations and values are nonetheless rooted in 'tradition'.
