MONTROSE

C. V. WEDGWOOD

"Wedgwood presents the fruit of thorough research in a style that is succinct as well as graceful."

— The Sunday Times

For pure heroism and nobility it would be difficult to match the "Great Marquis" of Montrose, the most famous participant of the Civil Wars in Scotland. He seems to belong with the knights of epic chivalry and he inspired his countrymen, Sir Walter Scott and John Buchan, to some of their finest writing. Relying upon the facts, Wedgwood shows her hero against the cultured background of his youth; carries him through those epic and terrible marches across the highlands, and on to the fearful end at Edinburgh, which he met, like all his trials, with fortitude.

CONFLICT OF LOYALTY

GEOFFREY HOWE

"... the best Tory memoirs of recent years ... [Howe] gives the most convincing inside picture so far of the Thatcher decade."

— Times Literary Supplement

This book spans the most important events of Geoffrey Howe's 20-year career in politics. Howe explains why he lost confidence in Margaret Thatcher, writing candidly about his dismissal as Foreign Secretary and resignation as Deputy Prime Minister. His resignation speech, in which he spoke of a "tragic conflict of loyalty," was the catalyst for Thatcher's downfall. Here he reveals why he made the speech that changed British politics forever. Conflict of Loyalty is an indispensable account of 20 years of British Conservatism, a political testament from the very heart of power.
