
About the Authors

Brenda Sims Blackwell is a Ph.D. candidate in Sociology at the University of Oklahoma with an interest in the link between inequality and social control.

Robert J. Bursik, Jr., is Associate Professor of Sociology and Co-Director of the Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency, and Social Control at the University of Oklahoma. The main focus of his research is on informal controls, especially at the neighborhood level, that deter illegal behavior.

David M. Engel is Professor of Law and Director of the Baldy Center for Law and Social Policy at the State University of New York at Buffalo. His research explores law, culture, and change in Southeast Asia (particularly Thailand), in a midwestern American community ("Sander County"), and among persons with disabilities and their families.

Harold G. Grasmick is Professor of Sociology and Co-Director of the Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency, and Social Control at the University of Oklahoma. His research interests include incorporating social norms and values into a rational choice theory of crime.

Stacia L. Haynie is an Assistant Professor at Louisiana State University. Her research focuses on judicial politics, public law, and comparative judicial behavior. She authored a study on dissent in the U.S. Supreme Court for the Journal of Politics. Her current research includes an investigation of resource inequalities and litigation outcomes before the Philippine Supreme Court.

William S. Lofquist is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the State University of New York at Geneseo. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Delaware in 1992. His research interests center on corporations and the law. He has published an article on organizational probation and has co-authored articles on civil jury decisionmaking in corporate cases and the development of the legal framework for the civilian nuclear power industry. He is currently researching the implementation of the organizational sentencing guidelines.

Patricia G. Steinhoff is Professor of Sociology and Director of the Center for Japanese Studies at the University of Hawaii. Her recent work includes Tenkō: Ideology and Societal Integration in Prewar Japan

(Garland Publishing, 1991); Nihon Sekigunha: Sono Shakaigakuteki Monogatari [Japan's Red Army Factions: A Sociological Tale] (Kawade Shob Shinsha, 1991); and several articles on political protest movements and social control in Japan. She is currently completing a book on ideology, violence, and commitment in the Japanese New Left during the 1960s and 1970s and has begun a companion study of the limits of dissent in contemporary Japan focusing on opposition to the emperor system.

C. Neal Tate is Regents Professor of Political Science at the University of North Texas. His research concentrates primarily on the comparative study of the policymaking of courts and the behavior of judges. With Donald W. Jackson, he recently co-edited Comparative Judicial Review and Public Policy. He has authored or co-authored articles on judicial politics and behavior in the Philippines, Canada, the United Kingdom, and the United States for several leading political science and area studies journals.

Marjorie S. Zatz is Associate Professor of Justice Studies at Arizona State University. She has written extensively on lawmaking, the legal profession, and racial and ethnic discrimination in court processing. She is the author of Producing Legality: Law and Socialism in Cuba (Routledge, Chapman & Hall, forthcoming 1994) and the co-editor with William Chambliss of Making Law: The Law, the State, and Structural Contradictions (Indiana University Press, 1993).
