THE SCRIPT OF HARRAPA AND MOHENJODARO

And its Connection with other Scripts.

By G. R. HUNTER. Introduction by Professor S. LANGDON.

The importance of the finds in the Indus Valley is well known, and the evidence of another early civilized colony, with its own writing system, is a matter of supreme interest to students of archæology and philology.

Dr. G. R. Hunter has intensively studied this indecipherable writing found on the seals, coins, and impressed slabs of clay which were unearched. His conclusions are based on all known texts up to April, 1931; and he presents a valuable classification of the archaic symbols, with reproductions of the various seals and fragments. The Brahmi "alphabet" is shown to be derived from the script of Mohenjodaro and Harappa, and through this is proved the connection of Brahmi with the South Semitic and Phœnician scripts. Of peculiar interest is the similarity of the signs on the Indus valley seals to the characters on the wooden tablets discovered at Easter Island.
