Human Rights and Humanitarian Norms as Customary International Law

THEODOR MERON, New York University School of Law

"[A] provocative, carefully documented study from one of America's most distinguished international law specialists....An impressive piece of scholarship, with importance extending beyond the small group of human rights analysts."—Choice
"A timely and major contribution to the human rights field....[Professor Meron] presents each analysis with scholarship, lucidity and elegance. Professor Meron...stands today in the first rank of international law scholars. The human rights field is fortunate to have captured his focus."

Common Heritage or Common Burden?

The United States Position on the Development of a Regime for Deep Sea-Bed Mining in the Law of the Sea Convention

MARKUS G. SCHMIDT, United Nations Office, Geneva with a Foreword
by Elliot Richardson

"Fascinating. His interviews with some 140 people, including almost all of the principal U.S. participants as well as many, but not all, of the other key figures, combined with extensive study of the literature (not least the two allegedly 'deep-throat' articles published in the New Yorker in 1983) have enabled Schmidt to provide an authoritative account of relationships within the delegation, between it and Washington and of the impact of American policy on the Convention."

The 1980-89 Cumulative Index for International Legal Materials is now available to libraries, institutions and individual subscribers.

The Index is an indispensable tool for research in the fields of contemporary international law and international relations, and provides lawyers, researchers, government officials and scholars with quick and easy access to the wealth of primary documents reproduced in I.L.M. during this decade. These documents include treaties, national legislation, judicial and arbitral decisions, resolutions of international organizations, and a variety of other reports and documents of great importance to the international community.

The Index also features a list of international conferences, and a separate Table of Cases which covers the national court and international tribunal decisions. A new Table of Treaties gives detailed information on the status of all treaties and agreements appearing in I.L.M. during the decade—information not often available.

Cumulative Indexes covering 1962-69 and 1970-79 are also available. Together, all three Indexes cover developments in international law and international relations for nearly 30 years. Can you afford not to have these time-saving resources at your fingertips?

For information on prices and on the special discount for orders of all three Indexes, please see the form below. To order, send the form and your payment to: International Legal Materials, American Society of International Law, 2223 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20008.
