

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

ROBERT LEWIS BONN is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, City University of New York. He received the Bobbs-Merrill Award in Sociology in 1970 and last year presented papers at the annual meetings of the Eastern Sociological Society and the American Sociological Association.

BRADLEY C. CANON is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Kentucky. Among his publications is "Compliance with Gault in Rural America," which appeared in the Journal of Family Law, Winter 1970-71. He has published a number of articles on state supreme courts and during the 1972-73 academic year he will be engaged in a study of the Mapp exclusionary rule on police search and seizure behavior.

BEVERLY BLAIR COOK is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Wisconsin Milwaukee. Her book, The Judicial Process in California, was published in 1967 by Dickinson Publishing Co. During the past five years she has been studying the district courts in Kansas and in the Seventh Circuit, under grants from the American Philosophical Society, the Social Science Research Council, and the University of Wisconsin. She is currently at work on a book on judicial behavior in the Seventh Circuit and a judicial biography of a federal judge. She has received a Ford Foundation Faculty Research Fellowship for 1972-73 to test a model of judicial decision making.

RICHARD L. ENGSTROM is Assistant Professor of Political Science, Louisiana State University, New Orleans. He has published articles on urban government and politics and is currently involved in a comparative study of the 1971 and 1972 legislative redistricting processes in Kentucky as well as a study of legislative recruitment and socialization in Louisiana. He is also editor of a forthcoming collection of original essays on metropolitan political integration.

G. DAVID GARSON is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Tufts University. He is the author of Handbook of Political Science Methods (Holbrook, 1971) and co-editor of Workers' Control Towards Participatory Democracy in the U.S. and Canada, to be published in 1973 (Vintage). He is now engaged in research on rioting in American society and is writing a book on the politics of social movements.

MICHEAL W. GILES, Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at Florida Atlantic University, is co-author of "Recurring Litigants: Federal Agencies Before the Supreme Court," to be published in the Western Political Science Quarterly.

DENNIS H. PARANZINO is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance and Commerce. His major interests include formal theory, comparative politics, and public policy. He is currently engaged in research on the development of structural models of political violence and an examination of the political and social consequences of economic change in developed countries.

LESLIE L. ROOS, JR. has been Visiting Professor of Political Science at Indiana University during the 1971-72 academic year and has received a Resources for the Future grant for the coming academic year. He is co-author of Managers of Modernization (Harvard University Press, 1971) and The Politics of Ecosuicide (Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1971). He is also co-editor of Quasi-Experiments, to be published by Northwestern University Press in 1973, and the forthcoming Beyond Organizations Economic and Behavioral Models of Collectivities.

NORALOU P. ROOS is Assistant Professor of Organizational Behavior at Northwestern University's Graduate School of Management and Research Associate with the Hospital Research and Educational Trust. With Leslie L. Roos she has published a number of articles on modernization and politics in the Middle East as well as the book, Managers of Modernization, listed above. She is now working on a book on a behavioral model of the hospital.

STEVEN THOMAS SEITZ is a coordinator for undergraduate independent studies on legislative research in the Department of Political Science, University of Minnesota and Ph.D. candidate at that institution. He has done extensive work on the gun-control issue in Minnesota with state and local officials and has testified on that subject before the state Senate Judiciary Committee. An article of his entitled "Ideologies and the Essence of Politics" is scheduled for publication in a reader on ideologies to be published next year.

S. SIDNEY ULMER is Professor of Political Science at the University of Kentucky. He is the author of Military Justice and the Right to Counsel (University of Kentucky Press, 1970) and editor of Introductory Readings in Political Behavior (Rand-McNally, 1961) and Political Decision-Making (Van Nostrand, 1970) as well as many chapters and articles. His graduate teaching has been primarily in the area of judicial behavior. Professor Ulmer has served on the executive councils and held office in numerous professional associations and has been a member of the National Science Foundation's Political Science Panel. His co-authors for the article in this issue, WILLIAM HINTZE and LOUISE KIRKLOSKY, are working toward their doctorates at the University of Kentucky.

THOMAS G. WALKER is Assistant Professor and Director of Undergraduate Studies, Department of Political Science, Emory University. He is co-author of Public Opinion and Responsible Democracy, to be published by Prentice-Hall, and co-editor of Reform and Responsiveness: Readings in American Politics (St. Martin's Press, 1972). His primary research and teaching interests are in the area of the American judicial system—Constitutional law, civil liberties, judicial process, and judicial behavior.

LETTIE M. WENNER is an Instructor in Political Science at Northern Illinois University. She recently completed her Ph.D. dissertation on water pollution control laws at the University of Wisconsin under the sponsorship of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, U. S. Department of Justice. Her major research interest is the public policy process, with particular emphasis on the impact that interest groups and the judicial process can make on policy outputs.