
About the Authors

Madelaine Adelman is Assistant Professor in the School of Justice Studies at Arizona State University. Her research and teaching focuses on the comparative study of gender, law, nation, and violence. She is currently working on a book on the politics of domestic violence in Israel.

Cindy Bejarano is a doctoral candidate in the School of Justice Studies at Arizona State University. She is a fellow of the New Mexico Minority Doctoral Scholar Program. Her areas of interest are Latino youth and conflict, Latino immigration to the Southwest, and border studies. Her current research examines intra-group conflict between Mexican immigrant youth and U.S.-born youth of Mexican descent.

Elizabeth Heger Boyle is Assistant Professor of Sociology and Law at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities. She researches topics related to international and comparative law and women's rights. Her research on attitude and behavior change with respect to femal genital cutting in several African countries has been funded in part by the National Science Foundation (Grant No. SBR-9806088, "POWRE: The Adoption and Enforcement of Anti-Female-Genital-Cutting Laws"). Her next project is an analysis of gender differences in naturalization among African refugees to the United States.

Eve Darian-Smith is Associate Professor in the Department of Anthropology, University of California, Santa Barbara. She practiced law in Australia before receiving a Master's degree and a Ph.D. in anthropology from Harvard and the University of Chicago. Her work focuses on the role in law in constructing the European Union, and explores themes related to nationalism, sovereignty, citizenship, and racism. Her recent book, Bridging Divides: The Channel Tunnel and the English Legal Identity in the New Europe (University of California Press 1999), received the Law & Society book prize in 2000. She has edited with Peter Fitzpatrick Laws of the Postcolonial (University of Michigan Press 1999), and published articles in various journals including Law and Critique, Law and Social Inquiry, Indiana Journal of Global Legal Studies, and American Ethnologist.

Mathieu Deflem is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Purdue University. His research areas include the sociology of law and social control, criminology, sociological theory, and comparative-historical sociology. A recently published work deals with comparative criminal justice, abortion, discourse theory, and democracy and justice. He conducts a website campaign, "Free Education Now!" against commercial lecture notes companies. He is editor of Habermas, Modernity, and Law.

Brian J. Glenn is a doctoral candidate in Politics at St. Anthony's College, Oxford University. His general research interests focus on how insurance shapes the boundaries of community in America, and he is writing a dissertation on the role mutual benefit societies played in the creation of the U.S. welfare state. During the 1999-2000 academic year he was a Research Fellow at the Insurance Law Center, University of Connecticut School of Law.

Eric A. Feldman, JD, Ph.D., is Associate Director of the Institute for Law and Society, New York University. He has been a Fulbright Fellow at the University of Tokyo, a Robert Wood Johnson Health Policy Research Scholar at Yale University, and an Abe Fellow at the Institut d-Etudes Politiques in Paris. He is author of The Ritual of Rights in Japan: Law, Society, and Health Policy (Cambridge, 2000) and editor of Blood Feuds: AIDS, Blood, and the Politics of Medical Disaster (Oxford, 1999). His articles have appeared in publications including the Journal of Asian Studies, the Los Angeles Times, the Hastings Center Report, and Social and Legal Studies.

Tom Ginsburg is Assistant Professor of Law at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. His research focuses on comparative legal institutions and their relevance to democratic change and economic development. He holds a Ph.D. from the Jurisprudence and Social Policy Program at the University of California, Berkeley.

Ryken Grattet, Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of California, Davis, is interested in how law is made meaningful in diverse settings in and outside the official legal order. He pursues these interests in studies of welfare, hate crime, and disability. His recent published work includes studies of nineteenth century industrial accident law, the use of rights discourse by worker's compensation reformers, and the diffusion of hate crime legislation in the United States. He is coauthor (with Valerie Jenness) of Building the Hate Crime Policy Domain: From Social Movement Concept to Law Enforcement Practice (forthcoming).

John Hagan is the John D. MacArthur Professor of Sociology and Law at Northwestern University and Senior Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. His book with Bill McCarthy, Mean Streets: Youth Crimes and Homelessness, was published by Cambridge University and received the 1998 C. Wright Mills Award from the Society for the Study of Social Problems and the Michael J. Hindelang Award of the American Society of Criminology. His forthcoming book, Northern Passage: The Lives of American Vietnam War Resisters in Canada, will be published in the coming year by Harvard University Press. He is currently doing research on the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Calvin Morrill is Professor of Sociology, Law, Psychology, and Communication at the University of Arizona. Aside from work on youth culture and conflict, he is collaborating with others to examine legal consciousness in schools and to study institution building in environmental conflict resolution.

Michael Musheno is Professor of Justice Studies and Director of the Center for Urban Inquiry at Arizona State University. In addition to his collaboration on Youth culture and conflict, he is collaborating with others in an exploration of identity, morality, and power, focusing on the discretionary judgments of street-level workers.

Scott Phillips is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Houston. His interests include criminology, law, and deviance. His current research examines how the social structure of a conflict influences violent and nonviolent forms of conflict management.

Sharon E. Preves is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Grand Valley State University in Allendale, Michigan, where she teaches courses on gender, sexuality, research methods, and introductory sociology. Her scholarship focuses on the experience and treatment of marginal populations, with particular emphasis on the construction of gender and sexual difference, illness, and ability.

Christine Yalda is a research associate at the Center for Urban Inquiry and a doctoral candidate in Law and Social Sciences at Arizona State University. She is a graduate of Boston University Law School. Her dissertation investigates governmentality in a multiethnic urban high school, focusing on young peoples' understandings of legal meanings, processes, and outcomes.