A Study of the Costumes worn in Ancient Greece from Pre-Hellenic Times to the Hellenistic Age. By ETHEL B. ABRAHAMS, M.A. With Diagrams and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 9s. net.

This work is an exhaustive study of the costumes worn by the Ancient Greeks from Pre-Hellenic or Minoan times down to the end of the Hellenistic age. It contains a new theory as to the cut and arrangement of the drapery of the archaic female statues on the Acropolis at Athens, a theory based on a careful examination of the statues, and on some experiments in draping a living model. The book is copiously illustrated.

A CENTURY OF ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES. By Professor A. MICHAELIS, of Strassburg. Translated into English by Miss BETTINA KAHNWEILER. With a Preface by Professor PERCY GARDNER, of Oxford. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

The "Archæology of the Spade"—its important results on classical soil as well as in other lands—forms the subject of this volume. A complete record of this fascinating subject has so far never been attempted. Professor Michaelis, although not an excavator, has closely followed the work of others during the last fifty years, and is thus well qualified to speak with authority whether of Delphi, Olympia and Athens, or Pompeii, Troy and Pergamon. Nor has the Orient been neglected. Egypt, Lycia, Assyria, Babylon and Palestine are all surveyed by Professor Michaelis. To quote from Professor Gardner's Preface: "It is a work showing intimate knowledge, but it is no dry summary; rather a record of what the writer, watching all with the greatest interest, learned as the scroll of excavation and research was gradually unrolled. This infusing of a personal element has made the book more interesting to the reader."

THE LATINIS IN THE LEVANT:

A History of Frankish Greece (1204-1566). By WILLIAM MILLER. With Maps. Medium 8vo, 21s. net.

"The fascinating subject of Mediæval Hellas is thus here treated exhaustively for the first time in English literature, and future travellers in a Greece now daily becoming more accessible will realise a new field for study in her romantic period, which offers the dramatist and novelist a store of hitherto unsuspected material; . . . the general clearness and lucidity with which Mr. Miller has treated a subject of exceptional difficulty cannot be too highly commended."—The Morning Post.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGION AND ETHICS.

Edited by Dr. JAMES HASTINGS.

The First Volume of this great work is now ready, price 28/- net in cloth, and 34/- net in half-morocco. It may also be had in 12 Monthly Parts at 2/6 net per Part, of which Part I. is ready. Full Prospectus, with specimen pages, free.

Dr. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, in the British Weekly, says this work is:—"The most enterprising venture in religious literature which has been undertaken in this country. . . . A great and magnificent enterprise." GLASGOW HERALD.—"This new enterprise throws Dr. Hastings' previous undertakings into the shade. . . . The volume is well printed, handsomely bound, and remarkably light and easy to handle. As to the contents, with few exceptions the articles are written by men who are acknowledged masters of the subjects they deal with—in some cases, indeed, they are the only acknowledged masters. Of the work of the Editors in matters of detail it is impossible to speak too highly."

PUBLIC OPINION.—"A very great book. No library could be better provided with what men have said and thought through the ages on Religion and Ethics and all they imply than by this one library in itself."

THE RELIGIOUS TEACHERS OF GREECE. Gifford Lectures on Natural Religion. By the late JAMES ADAM, Litt.D., Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Edited, with a Memoir, by his wife, ADELA MARION ADAM. Just Published. Demy 8vo, 10/6 net.
