

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

MARTHA IDALIA CHEW SÁNCHEZ is associate professor in the Global Studies Department and Caribbean and Latin American Studies Program at St. Lawrence University. She is the author of the book Corridos in Migrant Memory (2006). Her recent publications include “Deconstructing the Rhetoric of Mestizaje through the Chinese Presence in Mexico” and “Paramilitarism and State-Terrorism in Mexico as a Case Study of Shrinking Functions of the Neoliberal State.” Chew Sánchez teaches courses on critical race theory, border theory, qualitative methods, migration, and cultural studies.

JULIÁN DURAZO HERRMANN is professor of comparative politics at the Université du Québec à Montréal. He has published numerous articles on subnational politics and federalism in Latin America and is currently working on the evolution of state-society relations at the subnational level in Brazil and Mexico.

ALEXANDRA FILINDRA is assistant professor of political science at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She completed her PhD in political science at Rutgers University and was a postdoctoral fellow at the Taubman Center for Public Policy and American Institutions and the Center for the Study of Human Development, both at Brown University. Her academic work explores various aspects of immigration, border and internal enforcement policies, race, ethnicity, political psychology, and political behavior. Her work has appeared in Social Science Quarterly, State Politics and Policy Quarterly, Urban Affairs Review, International Migration, and elsewhere.

ANDRÉS HAM is a PhD student in agricultural and applied economics at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. In Argentina, he was a member of the Centro de Estudios Distributivos, Laborales y Sociales (CEDLAS), Universidad Nacional de La Plata, and a fellow of the National Scientific and Technical Research Council (CONICET) until 2011. His research focuses on poverty, inequality, and labor informality in Latin American countries.

SERGIO MIGUEL HUARCAYA holds a master's degree in Latin American studies from the Universidad Andina Simón Bolívar, Quito, Ecuador, and a PhD in anthropology and history from the University of Michigan. Currently, he is a postdoctoral researcher in the project “Indigeneity in the Contemporary World: Performance, Politics, Belonging” at Royal Holloway University of London. He is the author of No os embriaguéis . . . : Borracheras, identidad y conversión evangélica en Cacha, Ecuador (2003). He has published articles in the journals Revista Andina and Latin American and Caribbean Ethnic Studies.

LUIS ALFREDO INTERSIMONE es doctor en letras por Rutgers University. Su tesis de disertación se titula “Melodrama fundacional y escatológico en el peronismo”. Es profesor de Texas State University–San Marcos. Ha publicado De ogros y laberintos: Modernidad y nación en Octavio Paz (1999). Varios de sus artículos han aparecido en revistas como MLN, A Contracorriente, Chasqui y Monographic Review/Revista Monográfica. Su actual investigación, además de continuar el proyecto de su tesis de doctorado sobre melodrama fundacional y escatología en el peronismo, indaga asimismo la soberanía y biopolítica en discursos contemporáneos.

Latin American Research Review, Vol. 49, No. 3. © 2014 by the Latin American Studies Association.

DAVID J. MYERS is emeritus professor of political science at Pennsylvania State University. He is the author or editor of more than fifty articles and eight books. Myers has held faculty positions at the US Military Academy (West Point), the Instituto de Estudios Superiores de Administración (Caracas, Venezuela), UNINORTE (Barranquilla, Colombia), and Central University of Venezuela. In addition, he has consulted with agencies of the US government, the private sector, and political parties throughout Latin America. He served as an international election observer in Latin America with the Carter Center and International Republican Institute. His most recent publications include "The Legacy of Charisma: Venezuelan Politics after Hugo Chávez" (in Latin American Government and Politics, edited by Howard Wiarda and Harvey Kline, 8th ed., 2013).

VIRIDIANA RIOS CONTRERAS received her PhD in government from Harvard University. She studies drug trafficking, violence, and corruption in Mexico. Her research agenda aims to solve several puzzles about organized crime, from our ability to accurately measure drug-related violence to our understanding of drug cartels' behavior and mobility and the link between corruption and criminal violence. She regularly serves as a consultant and security policy adviser to private and public institutions in the United States and Mexico and presents her research in public forums.

ARCHIBALD R. M. RITTER is Distinguished Research Professor Emeritus of Economics and International Affairs at Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada. He was an initiator on the Canadian side and the Canadian coordinator of the Masters in Economics Program at the University of Havana for young Cuban professors from 1994 to 1999. He was chair of the Department of Economics from 2001 to 2004. His research interests and publications relate to development issues in East Africa and Latin America with an emphasis on Cuba, together with the international economy and the international mineral economy. He has published extensively on development issues, with a focus on Latin America and particularly on Cuba. He is the author of the blog The Cuban Economy (TheCubanEconomy.com).

PAUL RYER is assistant professor in the Department of Anthropology at the University of California, Riverside. Ryer has conducted long-term research in Cuba, where he has been affiliated with the University of Havana, and with the Cuban diaspora. His most recent research follows Cuban-educated African students as they migrate again, forging new diasporas and fashioning hybridized homelands. Ryer is currently completing a book, In Caribbean Waters: África, La Yuma, and the Imagined Geographies of Contemporary Cuba. His recent articles include "Diasporic Misfits: Cubarauis as '1.5 Generation' Saharan-Cubans" and "The Hyphen-Nation of Cuban-Educated Africans: Rethinking the '1.5 Generation' Paradigm." He is the founder and coeditor of Ethno Cuba (ethnocuba.ucr.edu), a professional blog by and for ethnographers of Cuba and its diaspora. He has been awarded an Andrew W. Mellon Fellowship, two grants from the John D. and Catherine T. Mac-

Arthur Foundation, a Ruth Landes Field Research grant, and a Thomas J. Watson Travelling Fellowship.

MARTÍN SCHORR es licenciado en sociología por la Universidad de Buenos Aires y doctor en ciencias sociales por la Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO). Investigador del Consejo Nacional de Investigaciones Científicas y Técnicas (CONICET) y del Área de Economía y Tecnología de la FLACSO, Sede Argentina, y docente en cursos de grado y posgrado en la Universidad de Buenos Aires, la Universidad de San Martín y FLACSO.

BRÁULIO FIGUEIREDO ALVES DA SILVA (PhD 2012, Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais) is a professor of sociology and criminal justice in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology and senior researcher at the Center for Crime and Public Security Safety Studies (CRISP), both at the Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais. His research is devoted to three different topics: neighborhood effects on collective efficacy and crime; victimization and fear of crime; and spatial analysis of crime. He is currently working on a comparative study of crime victimization in Brazil and Chile and a network analysis of delinquent behavior and social capital in a Metropolitan Region of Brazil using a school violence survey. His work has been published in journals such as Social Forces, Dados—Revista de Ciências Sociais, Brazilian Journal of Population Studies, Revista de Saúde Pública, and Brazilian Journal of Epidemiology.

NIL CASTRO DA SILVA is an assistant professor at the Instituto Rio Branco and a diplomat at the Division of the Caribbean of the Ministry of External Relations of Brazil. He holds a degree in law from Universidade Federal de Juiz de Fora, Minas Gerais. His current research focuses on Latin American social thinking, especially the writings of Gilberto Freyre.

HEIDI JANE M. SMITH received her doctorate in public administration from Florida International University in Miami and is currently a visiting professor at the Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México (ITAM) in Mexico City. Her research focuses on urban politics, local decision making, budgeting, and administrative structures, particularly in Latin America. She is currently evaluating the political nature of the municipal bond market in Mexico. Her recent publications have appeared in Public Administration Review and Public Budgeting and Finance.

CHRIS TILLY, professor of urban planning and sociology and director of the Institute for Research on Labor and Employment at the University of California Los Angeles, is an economist specializing in labor, income distribution, and local economic development, with research focusing on the United States and Mexico. Tilly's books include Half a Job: Bad and Good Part-Time Jobs in a Changing Labor Market; Glass Ceilings and Bottomless Pits: Women's Work, Women's Poverty (with Randy Albelda); Work under Capitalism (with Charles Tilly); Stories Employers Tell: Race, Skill, and Hiring in America (with Philip Moss); The Gloves-Off Economy: Labor Standards at the Bottom of America's Labor Market (coeditor); and Are Bad Jobs Inevitable? (coeditor).

MARCELA VELASCO JARAMILLO is assistant professor of political science at Colorado State University. She teaches in the areas of comparative government, South America, and environmental politics and has worked at various universities in Bogotá, Colombia. Her research interests include social movements and local governance, institutional change, and ethnic organizations. She has published articles on ethnic territoriality and on contentious politics and the state in Colombia. She received her PhD from Boston University in 2007.

ANDRÉS WAINER es licenciado en sociología por la Universidad de Buenos Aires y doctor en ciencias sociales por la Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO). Investigador del Consejo Nacional de Investigaciones Científicas y Técnicas (CONICET) y del Área de Economía y Tecnología de la FLACSO, Sede Argentina, y docente en cursos de grado y posgrado en la Universidad de Buenos Aires y la Universidad de San Martín.