THE NORTH OF ENGLAND SANITARIUM,

A Select Temperance Home for Ladies exclusively.

Is delightfully situated on the north bank of the river Tyne, amid a landscape seldom equalled in rich variety and extent, two miles east from Haltwhistle railway-station, telegraph and post office; and about as far west from that of Bardon Mill, midway between Gisland and Hexham; all near to that grandest and most interesting of antiquarian relics in Britain—the Roman Wall.

The remarkable healthfulness of the locality conspicuously indicates Hightown as naturally adapted for the important use to which it is devoted. Of the 623 districts into which the Registrar-General has apportioned England and Wales, that of Bellingham, ten miles to the north-east of Hightown, with a population of 7,000, stands alone as the most healthful; and two of the three next after Bellingham—viz., Glendale and Rothbury—are also in Northumberland. The atmosphere is most invigorating, and replete with ozone. The height above the sea-level is 350 feet; which according to Weber (see p. 182 of the "Proceedings of the Roy. Med-Chir. Soc. of London," for May, 1869, is so essential to invalids. The annual rainfall is the English average, about thirty inches (see the yearly publication by Mr. Symons, 136, Camden-road, London), such as the laws of nature require for the maintenance of health. The water supply is practically unlimited, and of the rarest excellence for every purpose, from a lively uncontaminated brook, and a copious natural fountain. Hightown stands on its own gentle eminence, naturally sheltered on all sides, except the south, by an amphitheatre of high land, which especially protects it on the north.

All the rooms are ventilated in the most efficient yet agreeable manner, and are thoroughly sunned and cheerful; in fact, the Sanitarium combines the usual comforts of a town residence, with the perfection of a country-house, equally adapted for winter and summer. The number of boarders being limited, Mr. and Mrs. Hurman, assisted by their two daughters, can guarantee the fullest attention to each individual.

No case of legally defined insanity can be received; but those afflicted with Dipso-mania will meet with the kindest and most successful treatment.

Address—Mr. HURMAN, Hightown, Haltwhistle, Northumberland.
