

IMPORTANT HUMAN RIGHTS TITLES

Honoring Human Rights, edited by Alice H. Henkin

The human rights officers of U.N. and other multinational peacekeeping missions, including those in Bosnia, Rwanda, Guatemala, Cambodia, Haiti and El Salvador, have written this series of important essays on the relationship between peacekeeping missions and human rights:

- The evolution of peacekeeping missions;
- the role of human rights within the peacekeeping process;
- monitoring abuses and rebuilding rights-respecting institutions in a civil society.

"If UN human rights missions, or in general UN missions, simply followed these recommendations, sustainable human rights work in post-conflict societies would take a large step forward."

Multilateral Developments in Banking: Environmental Principles and Concepts Reflecting General International Law and Public Policy, by Günther Handl

Volume 58 of International Environmental Law and Policy

This ground-breaking work describes the international legal and public policy underpinning the Multilateral Development Bank's pursuit of sustainable development as a strategic development objective. Its attainment thus becomes a key not only to the quality of life of inhabitants of the countries concerned, but also to global economic prosperity. The author examines the false dichotomy of economic development and environmental consciousness in a treatment of accountability, access to information, empowerment, social impact of MDB operations and the effectiveness of environmental protection measures and resources.

The UN Human Rights Treaty System: Universality at the Crossroads, by Anne F. Bayefsky

Human Rights Treaties are at the core of the international system for the promotion and protection of human rights. Every UN member state has ratified at least one of these treaties, making them applicable to virtually every child, woman, or man in the world- over six billion people. At the same time, human rights violations are rampant. The problem is that the implementation scheme accompanying the core human rights standards was drafted during a period of history when effective international monitoring was neither intended nor achievable. Today there is a gap between universal human right and remedy that is inescapable and inexcusable, threatening the integrity of the international human rights regime. There are overwhelming numbers of overdue reports, untenable backlogs, minimal individual complaints from vast numbers of potential victims, and widespread refusal of states to provide remedies when violations are found. This landmark report envisions a wide-ranging number of reforms, most of which can be accomplished without formal amendment. The recommendations generally assume a six treaty body regime, and focus primarily on offering concrete suggestions for improvements in working methods of the treaty bodies and procedures at the office at the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. This book details numerous proposals for bolstering national level partnerships, and for following-up the output of the treaty monitoring system as a key missing component of the implementation regime. One major reform recommended is the consolidation of the human rights treaty bodies and the creation of two permanent committees, one for the consideration of state reports and one for complaints. The international human rights legal system is at a crossroads, with the ideal of universality threatened by the fundamental shortfalls in effective implementation. This report offers a clear path to moving universality beyond rhetoric and towards a treaty regime meaningful and effective in the lives of everyday people.

A Century of War and Peace: Asia-Pacific Perspectives on the Centenary of the 1899 Hague Peace Conference edited by Timothy L.H. McCormack

Melbourne Studies in Comparative and International Law, Volume 1

This, the first volume in the series Melbourne Studies in Comparative and International Law, contains the revised and updated versions of papers presented to the Asia-Pacific Regional Conference held at The University of Melbourne to commemorate the centenary of the 1899 Hague Peace Conference and the 50th anniversary of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The collection by international scholars and expert practitioners explores major issues addressed at the Conference in 1899, including the peaceful settlement of disputes, international humanitarian law, and arms control.

The Falklands/Malvinas Case Breaking the Deadlock in the Anglo-Argentine Sovereignty Dispute

By Roberto C. Laver

Developments in International Law, Volume 40

The dispute over the South Atlantic islands that Britain calls the Falklands and Argentina claims as the Islas Malvinas has its own unique features, but the legal and political problems at its center, the tension between sovereignty based on prior title, the principle of territorial integrity, and the right of "a people" to self-determination are core issues not only here but elsewhere as well. This book presents a comprehensive analysis of the Falklands/Malvinas dispute and offers solid suggestions for new approaches to resolution. The author reviews the long, complex legal history of the islands, from the papal bulls of the fifteenth century and the diplomatic maneuverings of the European colonial powers to the break-up of empires and the evolution of the concept of self-determination. He also describes recent developments in detail: the role of the United Nations, the failed negotiations that preceded military conflict in 1982, and the profound changes that have occurred in the islands since then. This book makes an important contribution not only to the ongoing debate on the fate of the Falklands/Malvinas but also to the field of international law and conflict resolution.

Fundamentals of International Business Transactions

By Ronald A. Brand

There are many guides to the conduct of international business transactions, but none as comprehensive and detailed as this. It clearly identifies in great depth the many sources of risk in cross-border transactions, analyzes the legal instruments that provide protection to the parties, and describes the practical means – institutional, purchased, and negotiated – of reducing, reallocating, and perhaps even eliminating risks. Each chapter covers a distinct element of risk, with insightful commentary on the relevant national, regional, and international laws and detailed analyses of leading and defining cases from many jurisdictions and international courts, as well as considerations of significant scholarly contributions and guidance through insurance options and matters for negotiation. Beginning with the entry-level commercial transaction and letter of credit financing, the author moves through issues of commercial law, dispute resolution, sovereign involvement, public international law, antitrust law, and taxation. Along the way, he highlights types of transaction to which host country law has special application. With its expert application and interpretation of the relevant provisions of such important legal instruments as the UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (CISG), and UNIDROIT Principles, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), and the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), this major work brings a depth and breadth of treatment to its subject matter for which the student and practitioner will search in vain elsewhere. It is certain to quickly take its place as a definitive work.

THE UNITED NATIONS, LAW AND PRACTICE

edited by Franz Cede and Lilly Sucharipa-Behrmann

It is not possible that the political changes in the world would have left an organization such as the United Nations unaffected. This title is a concise, effective, up-to-date account of how the world's political changes have affected the United Nations, and how the various groups that constitute the United Nations have reacted. The authors, diplomats and academics with both practical and ideal experience of international relations, have joined to describe with precision the structure of this vital world organization in the present context of international relations.

THE INSPECTION PANEL OF THE WORLD BANK: A Different Complaints Procedure, edited by Gudmundur Alfredsson and Rolf Ring Volume 5 of the Raoul Wallenberg Institute Human Rights Library

This volume is the result of a workshop on the Inspection Panel sponsored by the Institute and by the World Bank. The goal of the workshop was to develop ideas useful to the Inspection Panel and similar institutions in carrying out their duties, including the training of national and international officials in human rights monitoring and enforcement. World financial institutions and consortia are acknowledging this duty not only as a service to human rights, but even more so in recognition of the contribution that human rights, democracy and transparent government make to political stability and economic development.

DEFENSES IN CONTEMPORARY INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL LAW

By Geert-Jan G.J. Knoops

This book offers a meticulous analysis of the case law in the post World War II Military Tribunals and the ad hoc tribunals for Rwanda and the Former Yugoslavia, with particular attention to the defenses developed, their rationales, and their origins in various municipal systems. It analyzes the defense provisions in the charters and statutes underlying these tribunals and the new International Criminal Court. Building on this detailed material, Dr. Knoops goes on to propose systematic measures by which fair and rigorous defenses may be put to use in all cases where international criminal law applies, especially the problematic field of multinational peacekeeping operations. His analysis culminates in a new formulation of international due process.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT AND THE TRANSFORMATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW: Justice for the New Millenium

By Leila Sadat

This new book is a vitally important "restatement" of international criminal law. It discovers and delineates the process that led the United Nations from Nuremberg to the Rome Statute of an International Criminal Court. Applying both direct practical experience and insightful analysis, Professor Sadat describes, in detail the pattern that has emerged. She re-examines existing theories about international law and its formation, and suggests that the negotiation and adoption of the ICC Statute worked a quiet, albeit uneasy, revolution in international law.

UNDERSTANDING INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTIONS AND THE LEGISLATIVE PROCESS

Essays by Paul C. Szasz

Edited by Edith Brown Weiss

In the realm of the law of international organizations and treaty law, few commentators have made a more significant contribution than Paul C. Szasz. In his years of distinguished service at the U.N., and in his subsequent career as a prominent consultant to international institutions, he has mastered a highly specialized body of knowledge that allows him to study the inner and outer workings of the international legislative, administrative, and judicial processes with unique and compelling authority.

The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy
Tufts University

Professor of Public International Law

The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, established in 1933 as the first graduate school of international affairs in the United States, seeks a full-time tenure-track Associate Professor of Public International Law beginning in September 2002. This position requires a J.D. or equivalent and practical legal experience in the public or private sphere. While it is likely that the appointment will be made at the level of associate professor, applicants at the assistant level with exceptional promise and applicants at the full professor level with demonstrated achievement also will be considered. The primary responsibility of the position will be teaching and scholarship in the area of public international law; sub-specialties or interest in other fields (for example, resources and environment, human security, refugee law, regional integration, arms control regimes, or foreign affairs law) also will be taken into account. Review of applications will begin October 15, 2001. Interested candidates should send a cover letter, curriculum vitae, three letters of recommendation, and a sample of written work to:

Chair
