

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

ISABELLA ALCAÑIZ is an assistant professor at the University of Houston. Her research lies at the intersection of comparative politics and international relations, with a particular focus on Latin America. She has published work on the effects of globalization on political advocacy and mass politics in Latin America. Currently, she is analyzing the politics of nuclear science and technology in Latin America, Africa, and Asia.

BRIAN CONNAUGHTON is professor and researcher at the Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, Iztapalapa. He has published widely on late-eighteenth- and late-nineteenth-century political culture and Catholicism in Mexico. His works include Dimensiones de la identidad patriótica: Religión, política y regiones en México, siglo XIX (Mexico City, 2001) and Clerical Ideology in a Revolutionary Age: The Guadalajara Church and the Idea of the Mexican Nation (1788–1853) (Calgary, 2003).

R. DOUGLAS COPE is associate professor of history at Brown University. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin–Madison in 1987. He is the author of The Limits of Racial Domination: Plebeian Society in Colonial Mexico City, 1660–1720. His current research focuses on the informal economy in eighteenth-century Mexico City.

JORDI DíEZ is associate professor of political science at the University of Guelph and fellow of the Mark S. Bonham Centre for Sexual Diversity Studies at the University of Toronto. He has written/edited Political Change and Environmental Policymaking in Mexico, Canadian and Mexican Security in the New North America and Global Environmental Challenges: Perspectives from the South, and his work has appeared in Mexican Studies/Estudios Mexicanos and European Review of Latin American and Caribbean Studies. His research interests include comparative politics, Latin American politics, processes of democratization, comparative public policy, environmental politics and policy, social movements, civil-military relations, North American security relations, and the politics of sexual minority rights.

CECILIA DOCKENDORFF es fundadora y presidenta de Fundación Soles, organización no gubernamental dedicada a la investigación e intervención social. Es docente del magíster en análisis sistémico aplicado a la sociedad, de la Universidad de Chile. Es socióloga por la Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile, magíster en antropología y desarrollo por la Universidad de Chile y Dra.(c) en sociología por la Universidad Alberto Hurtado.

MARÍA ALEJANDRA ENERGICI SPROVERA es asistente de la unidad de investigación cualitativa de la escuela de psicología de la Universidad Alberto Hurtado y se ha desempeñado como docente de las cátedras “metodologías cualitativas” y “análisis de datos cualitativos” para la carrera de trabajo social en la misma universidad.

BRIAN J. FRIED is pursuing his Ph.D. in political science at Yale University. He received a master's degree in political science from the University of Chicago in 2006. His dissertation seeks to explain the decline of clientelism in Brazil's Northeast. Other research interests include identity politics, the health consequences of macroeconomic shocks in less developed countries, and furthering the application of multimethod approaches in political science.

JORGE GELMAN se doctoró en historia en 1983 en la École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales, de París. Es profesor titular de historia argentina en la Universidad de Buenos Aires e investigador principal del Consejo Nacional de Investigaciones Científicas y Técnicas en el Instituto Ravignani de esa universidad. Fue presidente de la Asociación Argentina de Historia Económica. Ha publicado artículos y libros dedicados a la historia económica, social y política de Argentina y América Latina referidos al período colonial y al siglo XIX. Recientemente ha escrito Rosas, estanciero: Gobierno y expansión ganadera (colección Claves para Todos, Capital Intelectual, Buenos Aires, 2005) y ha compilado La historia económica argentina en la encrucijada: Balances y perspectivas (Editorial Prometeo Libros/Asociación Argentina de Historia Económica, Buenos Aires, 2006). Dirige la colección Nudos de la historia argentina en la editorial Sudamericana.

SIMÓN PEDRO IZCARA PALACIOS is professor of rural sociology at the Department of Sociology (UAMCEH), Tamaulipas University, Mexico, and is a member of the National System of Researchers of Mexico (SNI II). He specializes in rural and immigration studies. Recent publications include "The Social Situation of Immigrant Farm Workers: A Comparative Study between Spain and the U.S.," in The Nokei Ronso: The Review of Agricultural Economics; "Relative Deprivation and Migration: The Case of Tamaulipas," in Migraciones Internacionales (in Spanish); and Demographic Analysis of Tamaulipas (in Spanish, Plaza y Valdés, 2009).

STEPHANIE KIRK is assistant professor of Spanish; women, gender, and sexuality studies; and comparative literature at Washington University in St. Louis. Her main teaching and research interests include the literature and culture of colonial Latin America and the early modern Atlantic world, with a focus on gender and religion. Her book, Convent Life in Colonial Mexico: A Tale of Two Communities, was published by Florida University Press in 2007. Her edited volume Estudios coloniales latinoamericanos en el siglo XXI: Nuevos itinerarios is forthcoming from the Instituto Internacional de Literatura Iberoamericana at the University of Pittsburgh. She is also the author of a number of articles and essays. Kirk is currently at work on her second book project, tentatively titled The World According to Sor Juana: The Gender Politics of Culture in Colonial Mexico.

PAUL LAGUNES is a Ph.D. candidate in political science at Yale University. He applies field experiments to study corruption and class bias on the part of public officials. His current project looks at these issues at the municipal level in Mexico. His research interests include the rule of law and public administration.

NOAM LUPU is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Politics at Princeton University. His research explores the causes of party breakdown in Latin America, focusing on voter defections and intraparty elite conflicts. His other research interests include the development of partisanship in new democracies, voter behavior in Latin America, and the effects of inequality on voter preferences and policy outcomes.

SOPHIA A. MCCLENNEN is associate professor of comparative literature, Spanish, and women's studies at the Pennsylvania State University, University Park, where she teaches inter-American literature, women's world literature, media studies, and comparative cultural studies. Her book Ariel Dorfman: An Aesthetics of Hope is forthcoming from Duke University Press.

GAIL MUMMERT is a professor in the Center for Anthropological Studies at El Colegio de Michoacán in western Mexico. Trained as a demographer and a social anthropologist, her research interests have focused on novel forms of family life and gender relations in the face of sweeping social and cultural change throughout rural Mexico in the latter half of the twentieth century. She is the author of Tierra que pica (1994) and Fronteras fragmentadas, an edited volume on migration between Mexico and the United States. Her current research deals with transnational families and their encounters with various nation-states, particularly long-distance caregiving arrangements for the young and the old in Mexico and in China.

JOHN A. PEELER is professor emeritus of political science and former director of the Program in Latin American Studies of Bucknell University. He is the author of published chapters and articles on indigenous politics in Latin America, and of Building Democracy in Latin America, 3rd ed. (Lynne Rienner, 2009).

JOSÉ ANTONIO ROMÁN BRUGNOLI es profesor adjunto en la Escuela de Psicología de la Universidad Alberto Hurtado, coordinador de la unidad de investigación cualitativa y de las áreas de investigación y de psicología social comunitaria en la misma escuela. Es licenciado en psicología y psicólogo mención laboral/organizacional por la Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile, magíster y doctor en psicología social por la Universidad Autónoma de Barcelona.

DANIEL SANTILLI es doctor en historia por la Universidad de Buenos Aires e investigador del Instituto Ravignani, de dicha universidad, en donde enseña historia argentina del período 1776–1862. Ha publicado numerosos artículos relacionados con demografía histórica, estudios de familia y de redes sociales, sobre distribución de la riqueza y sobre fiscalidad de la etapa indicada. Es autor, junto a Jorge Gelman, del libro De Rivadavia a Rosas: Desigualdad y crecimiento económico. (Siglo XXI, Universidad de Belgrano, 2006).

ANDREW SLUYTER earned his Ph.D. from the University of Texas at Austin in 1995 and is now associate professor in the Department of Geography and Anthropology at Louisiana State University. His work appears in the award-winning book Colonialism and Landscape, and he has published articles in Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, Annals of the Association of American Geographers, Atlantic Studies, and other journals. His current research focuses on cattle herders of the Atlantic world, from 1500 to 1900, especially the neglected roles of blacks in interconnecting peoples and places.

ATHEENDAR VENKATARAMANI received his Ph.D. in health policy (economics) from Yale University in 2009 and is currently finishing his M.D. at the Washington University School of Medicine. His research interests include the long-term effects of public programs on health and economic status, chronic disease in developing countries, and the role of incentives and corruption in the health-care sector.

SONJA WOLF holds a Ph.D. in International Politics from Aberystwyth University and is currently a Post-doctoral Fellow at the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México. Her recent research has focused on street gangs and gang policies in Central America. She has published in the Journal of Latin American Studies and Foreign Affairs Latinoamérica and is currently working on a book manuscript on gang control in El Salvador.