

dent than at those places of higher learning.

Sid is both a student of comparative politics and of American politics, helping to demonstrate that American politics can be fruitfully viewed in a comparative context. He began his career by co-authoring The Civic Culture (1963) with Gabriel Almond, and in the 1970s wrote award-winning books on Participation in America (1972) with Norman Nie and The Changing American Voter (1976) with Nie and John Petrocik. Other major works of his in American politics include Equality in America (1987), with Gary Orren, and Injury to Insult: Unemployment, Class and Political Response (1979) with Kay L. Schlozman. His continuing work on comparative politics includes Participation and Political Equality: A Seven Nation Comparison (1978) with Norman Nie and Jae-On Kim, and Elites and the Idea of Equality (1987) with six co-authors, three of them Japanese. In his work, he has always met the demanding standard that he has imposed on comparativists: that one should not write about a country one hasn't at least flown over!

What Sid Verba seems to seek in life is easy to state but difficult to realize: to make significant contributions as a political scientist, in his writing and teaching; to be a good citizen of his university, his profession and his society; to love and support his friends and his family; and to make people laugh. Anyone who knows him recognizes not only his professional accomplishments but his generosity of spirit, innate reasonableness, concern for others—and his self-deprecating sense of humor. The most recent recipient of the Madison Award, James Q. Wilson, is reported once to have been called the “Clint Eastwood of Political Science,” and to have remarked that if this was so, Sid was the Alan Alda.

As Sid has quipped, “the plural of ‘anecdote’ is ‘data.’” Few of us can meet his standards, but we have enough data about Sidney Verba to recognize human excellence when we see it. In conferring upon him the Madison Award, we honor his accomplishments as a political scientist; those of us who know him also honor his excellence as a human being.

Carey McWilliams Award ($500)

Presented each year to honor a major journalistic contribution to our understanding of politics.

Award Committee: Timothy E. Cook, Williams College, Chair; Marion R. Just, Wellesley College; Twiley Barker, University of Illinois at Chicago

Recipient: Nina Totenberg, National Public Radio

Citation: On behalf of my colleagues, I am happy to present this year's McWilliams award to Nina Totenberg of National Public Radio. We found many reasons to honor Ms. Totenberg. We, like many Americans, were forcefully impressed by her courage and resourcefulness in covering the confirmations of Supreme Court nominees and uncovering information that facilitated extraordinary moments of public debate. But we honor above all Ms. Totenberg's day-in-day-out coverage of a most complex and misunderstood institution, the Supreme Court, and her incisive ability to illuminate decisions and issues on the unpromising medium of radio. H. W. Perry, Jr., in the course of his interviews with justices and former clerks for his recent fine book on how the Court chooses its agenda, adds a footnote about journalists' interviews which includes the dictum, “One person who covers the Court . . . deserves special recognition—Nina Totenberg of National Public Radio. I single her out not because I admire her work (which I do) but because she was a journalist mentioned to me frequently by my informants, most of whom had a high regard for her.” For many of us, when a Supreme Court hands down a decision, she is usually the person to whom we tune in first to make sense of what has happened. A reporter who is able to satisfy practitioner and citizen alike certainly deserves honor for “a significant contribution to our understanding of politics.”

APSA Awards and Recipients

One of the most important activities of the Association is the promotion and recognition of scholarly excellence in political science. Listed below are the recipients of each APSA award who were honored for the high quality of their work and their contributions to the discipline. A cumulative list of the award winners will be published every three years in conjunction with the Madison Award.

*“Affiliation” indicates the recipient's affiliation at the time of receiving the award.
