This collection brings together some of the best recent research on the subject. Of the 30 essays, in English, French or German with English abstracts, some explore the attitude of working-class organisations and political parties towards racism and colonialism, others trace the cultural and ritual manifestations of 'proletarian internationalism'. There are contributions on the rise and development of organisations across national borders, and some instances are examined when working-class movements made a practical effort to achieve international solidarity.

With a few exceptions these essays were first presented as papers at a symposium held on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the International Institute of Social History in Amsterdam, 1985.

At present no similar comprehensive work exists in the field. This collection will be essential reading to all students of labour history.

Social History

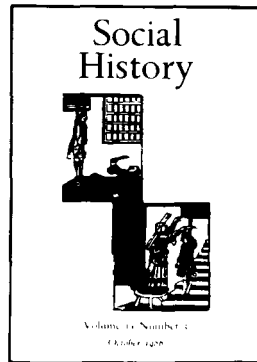

Editors

JANET BLACKMAN and KEITH NIELD

Dept of Economic and Social History, University of Hull

Social History began publication in January 1976. It published the best work available in social historical writing, regardless of period or place, but emphasises the links between social history and its related disciplines, including sociology, social anthropology, politics, and the processes of economic development and growth.

It continues to develop both its recent focus on the twentieth century and its coverage of the medieval and early modern periods.

Subscription rates: home individuals £22; home institutions £32; overseas individuals £26.40; North America individuals $46; overseas institutions £35.20; North America institutions $63. Single copies £13.
