leader	295	Twenty-one years of arq
design	298	Twenty-one lessons learnt Jonathan Sergison reflects on the 'search' that lies within the word 'research', identifying twenty-one lessons from the practice of Sergison Bates, seeking interesting ways to use ordinary things.
criticism	310	Lost in translation Silke Kapp considers some of the implications of an internationalised science for the socio-spatial and project-oriented kind of research that characterises the field of architecture and planning.
research	315	In uncharted waters Peter Carolin returns to the origins of arq and reflects on the period of his editorship from 1994–2003. The journal's founding principles remain just as urgent today.
	321	The trajectory of architectural research in the UK and US: 1995–2016 Joshua D. Lee and Steven A. Moore examine arq 's first twenty-one years by coding and quantifying its grammars compared to those present in the Journal of Architectural Education and discuss the trajectory of architectural research.
	328	Research at the RIBA: an institutional history 1958–1971 Rowena Hay, Neal Shasore and Flora Samuel make the case for institutional history as a basis for future strategy, by focusing on the development of research at the Royal Institute of British Architects.
	338	On research by design Yasser Megahed reflects on preoccupations from early issues of arq around whether, and how, design could constitute research. This survey of contemporary architectural design research recognises how its methods have matured.
theory	344	Ideas matter Peggy Deamer questions whether current definitions of 'research' are stifling 'ideas' that might be relevant to our discipline. This paper examines this question in the light of design, history/theory, teaching, and advocacy.
history	347	Is architectural history getting any bigger? Timothy Hyde argues that, in recognising that the discipline of architectural history is circumscribed by still-modest aspirations, a bigger disciplinary ambition remains to be forged.
digital	351	Digital research in architecture: reflecting on the past, analysing the trends and considering the future Michael J. Ostwald reflects on the last twenty-one years in digital architectural research, using the results of a longitudinal analysis of research themes to identify trends and future implications.
	359	Rustic figuration Ulrika Karlsson shows how recent trends in digital research are now engaging with long standing questions of architectural representations and discourse instead of breaking with them.
	369	Blockchain for architects: challenges from the sharing economy Richard Coyne and Tolulope Onabolu contemplate how cryptocurrencies, blockchain technology and other aspects of the sharing economy offer benefits and challenges for architecture. They also furnish metaphors about urban living.

materials	375	Architecture and nature: reflections from active retirement Richard Weston discusses a chance encounter with an ammonite, Liberty's 'Scarf Hall', a creative app for children called Molly's World, and virtual realities captured from microscopic mineral-worlds.
urbanism	383	The cartographic and the geopolitical: advocating a new agenda in architectural thinking and research Jianfei Zhu champions architectural research as a field of real relations spreading, locally and trans-locally, across a vast geography, in a space of the other and a space of the outside.
education	387	A minor majority Lesley Lokko asks, on the African continent, teaching African students, what sort of materials is being presented to learners, and how is it being interpreted?
practice	393	Innovative research units in architecture studios in New York Francisco Brown offers insights from a series of interviews with research units in New York practices reflecting on their business models and objectives: OMA/AMO; ennead/Lab; Thornton Tomasetti/CORE Studio; and, Terreform.
review	397	Big Capital: Who is London for? by Anna Minton Reviewed by Jane Rendell
	401	Collected Essays in Architectural Criticism by Alan Colquhoun Reviewed by David Leatherbarrow insight	404	Thoughts from the garden shed Dean Hawkes
