'The Learned Guide of our Nation' Tobias Asser was coined upon his demise by the then Dutch Foreign Minister, as this dignitary solemnly pledged his country over the open grave: 'We will not forget'. Fairly few though are the Dutch these days who will recall Tobias Asser's exceptional talents and the crucial role this gifted Amsterdam scholar of Jewish descent played in putting The Hague back in touch with the world and have it emerge as a centre of international law and diplomacy. In retrospect, reviewing that is in the perspective of a full century of international adjudication and with The Hague Tradition of International Law firmly established, it is hard to imagine the unlikely beginnings of the current claims of our proud Legal Capital and the critical bearing of Tobias Asser's visionary, daring views on a remarkable process that turned history around. This year we celebrate the centenary of Asser's unique status in The Netherlands as the nation's single Nobel Peace laureate, along with the assignment of the designation 'Royal' to the Dutch Association of International Law [the oldest national branch of the ILA], to which Tobias Asser stood godfather a full hundred years ago. It makes for a fitting moment to step back from the hectic and briefly pause and ponder: Siste Viator!

Dr. Arthur Eyffinger [1947, The Hague] is classicist and legal historian.

The Hague Journal on the Rule of Law is a multidisciplinary journal that aims to deepen and broaden our knowledge and understanding about the rule of law. Its two main areas of interest are: 1) theoretical issues related to the conceptualization and implementation of the rule of law in domestic and international contexts; 2) the relation between the rule of law and economic development, democratization and human rights protection. The HJRL welcomes contributions from academics and practitioners with expertise in any relevant field, including law, anthropology, economics, philosophy, political science and sociology.

The Hague Journal on the Rule of Law is supported by the Hague Institute for the Internationalisation of Law (HiIL). It is indexed by the Westlaw UK Legal Journals Index (LJI) and the Index to Foreign Legal Publications.

EDITORIAL POLICY & GUIDELINES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

The Hague Journal on the Rule of Law publishes two categories of articles: papers (approx. 6000–10,000 words) and notes (approx. 500–3000 words). Papers are accepted on the basis of double blind peer-review. Notes are accepted on the basis of review by two or more editors of the journal. Authors should feel free to make inquiries at the Editorial Office in case they consider writing a paper or a note. Authors are kindly requested to send their manuscript to the Editorial Office at any time of the year. All submitted materials should be in English. For detailed guidelines for manuscripts, contact the editorial office or see www.assertpress.nl/cata/hjrl/fra.htm or <http://journals.cambridge.org>.

Submission and publication elsewhere

Manuscripts submitted to the HJRL must not be under consideration for publication elsewhere. Acceptance of the Editorial Board's offer to publish, implies that the author agrees to an embargo on publication elsewhere for a period of two years following the date of publication in the HJRL. After this two-year period, the author may republish the article elsewhere, provided only that the author notifies the Publisher and ensures that the Publisher is properly credited and that the relevant copyright notice is repeated verbatim.

Revision, language-editing and copy-editing

Authors are responsible for the language-editing of their texts and copy-editing in conformity with the guidelines for authors. After acceptance of a text for publication, the fully edited and correct text must be sent to the Editorial Office within four weeks. Any (minor) changes to the text must also be made within this four-week period. Authors will not receive formatted proofs for correction.

Books for Review

Books for review and proposals to review books should be addressed to the Editorial Office.

Fees

Authors will not receive a fee, but will be presented a complimentary issue of the HJRL in which their contribution appears.
