Out of Our Minds

Reason and Madness in the Exploration of Central Africa

JOHANNES FABIAN

"This subtle and original book is an anthropology of anthropologists, an exploration of explorers. We have for much too long looked at the records of the late 19th-century European travelers to Central Africa mainly as source material—sometimes reliable, sometimes not—about Africa. Fabian holds these visitors' accounts up to a mirror and looks at what they show about Europe's own assumptions, prejudices, and dreams."

Speaking with Vampires

Rumor and History in Colonial Africa

LUISE WHITE

"Stimulating and provocative. This book on vampires reverses strong mythologies and will make a significant difference in African Studies."

The Comparative Imagination

On the History of Racism, Nationalism, and Social Movements

GEORGE M. FREDRICKSON

"Those who spend much of their lives comparing the histories of different societies are relatively rare and, of them, George Fredrickson is certainly one of the most distinguished."
