CONTRIBUTORS

ALAYNE ADAMS is an Assistant Professor at Columbia University School of Public Health, in the Centre for Population and Family Health. She received her doctorate in 1992 from the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine; it focused on seasonal food insecurity and nutritional, social and economic risk among agriculturalists in central Mali. She has done further fieldwork in Mali and in Bangladesh.

JOCELYN ALEXANDER is a Senior Associate Member of St Antony's College, Oxford. She is completing a book on the history of Matabeleland North (Zimbabwe) with Professor Terence Ranger and Dr JoAnn McGregor. She has also done research in Mozambique; in 1997 some of her findings were published in Africa (67.1).

JINDRA CEKAN works in Baltimore as Food Security Adviser for Catholic Relief Services; she oversees the food security programming for over ten countries in Africa. In 1994 she got her doctorate (in international political economy) with a thesis on the famine early-warning system in Mali, the système d'alerte précoce.

JOANNA LEWIS is Director of Studies in History and college lecturer at Churchill College, Cambridge. She is writing a book on colonial government in Kenya and the Second World War. She has published on Mau Mau, the Angolan peace process and human rights in East Africa.

KRIJN PETERS is a member of the Working Group on Technology and Agrarian Development at Wageningen Agricultural University in the Netherlands, and is carrying out fieldwork on youth combatants in Cambodia. Further interviews of his from Sierra Leone are to be published in Cahiers d'études africaines.

PAUL RICHARDS is Professor at Wageningen Agricultural University in the Netherlands, where he is chair of the Working Group on Technology and Agrarian Development. His most recent book, published in 1996 but now in its second edition, is Fighting for the Rain Forest: war, youth and resources in Sierra Leone.

TODD SANDERS recently completed his doctorate in the Department of Anthropology at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at the LSE's Gender Institute, where he is conducting research on pre-colonial and colonial gender relations among the Turkana of north-west Kenya.

RAINER SAUERBORN is Chairman of the Department of Tropical Hygiene and Public Health at Heidelberg University Medical School. A paediatrician by training, he spent four years in Burkina Faso as a district health officer before joining the Harvard Institute for International Development (1991–96).

JOHAN de SMEDT has been working for various Dutch medical NGOs, mainly in Rwanda and Tanzania, since 1994. He did his M.A. in social anthropology at the University of Leiden (1985–91) and has travelled extensively in eastern Africa. He currently lives in Spain.
